Bill Authorizing Hospital Association to Buy State Property is Introduced

Dr. Potter Acts Promptly in Having It Drawn and Sent to Mr. Henderson.

ALLOWS TIME FOR DETAILS

That Dr. Ellen C. Potter, commissioner of Public Welfare, is entering heartily into furthering the project for better hospital facilities at Connellsville, and is active in getting the necessary machinery in motion at Harrisburg, is attested by action she has already taken and a letter she has written in confirmation.

Appreciating the fact that an act of the Legislature must be passed in order to provide the authority necessary to carry the hospital undertaking through, she yesterday sought to call Attorney R. S. Matthews, of the executive committee of the Connellsville Hospital Association, on the telephone in order to discuss the subject with him. Unable to get her call through Dr. Potter acted upon her own initiative and had an enabling act drawn up and rushed to the House where it was delivered to Representative J. B. Henderson who promptly introduced the measure.

This forenoon Attorney Matthews received a letter from Dr. Potter explaining the necessity for action such as she had taken with reference to the bill introduced by Representative Henderson, the purpose of which is "to authorize incorporated hospital associations to acquire state owned hospital property." In her letter Dr. Potter says:

"We are frantically at work and at this moment are trying to get you on the long distance telephone in order to discuss an Enabling Act which would permit your organization, the state board of the institution and our department to get together on a co-operative proposition for the maintenance of the institution in the future.

"We think it probable that because the time is so short the best thing for us to do is to pass the Enabling Act, if possible, and then work out the details somewhat at leisure during the next year.

"We have drawn an Enabling Act which will give us breathing space and if we can develop mutually acceptable plans will enable us to establish a real hospital at Connellsville. Mr. Hunt has just rushed up to the House with it and have given it to Mr. Henderson."

PLANNING TO HANDLE PROSECUTION IN CASE AGAINST H. M. KEPHART

HARRISBURG March 29.—Decision will probably be made today by Attorney General George Woodruff as to the course the state will follow in the trial of the Kephart case, scheduled to be called for trial in the Dauphin county court on April 30.

Within the last week details of the prosecution of the actions against the former treasurer have been under discussion, one of the questions being the extent of participation of Ex-First Deputy Attorney General George Ross Hull, now a special deputy, in the trial. Mr. Hull handled much of the detail of the audit hearings and has been in charge of preparations for the court proceedings.

There is a possibility the Attorney General's Department may take charge of the prosecution, but whether it will affect the date of trial is not known.

Splendid Service at U. P. Church Last Night

A large attendance listened to Rev. J. M. Blackwood preach on the subject "The Lost Boy," at the United Presbyterian Church last night.

"The boy got restless when he thought about his share of the inheritance," the speaker said. "He gave his father no rest until he got his portion. Then he left home and went into a place where he was not known and had a so-called good time. Had plenty of friends as long as he had money. When his money was spent, his so-called friends left him.

"He went to work, was hungry, and when a man works and is hungry he begins to think. He thought about his good home and his good father and started back home. His father received him gladly, just as he came to him, in his rags and filth and gave him a fine reception.

"So God will do with us."

STOREKEEPERS CAN NOW SELL NEAR BEER

HARRISBURG, March 29.—With the approval of the enforcement bill by Governor Pinchot, the license laws of the state are no longer effective, and the sale of beverages containing less than one-half of one per cent alcohol is permitted by any one complying with the usual mercantile license requirements, according to views expressed in legal circles here today.

Companions of the slain officer countered with a withering fire from vantage points behind trees and ledges. When the officers entered the house the two men and Mrs. Strong were dead. The woman, according to the officers, was found with a repeating rifle clutched in her stiffening fingers.

From their hiding place under a bed the five children of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Strong crawled out after they had been reassured by the officers. They had escaped unharmed.

Two stills were found in a strongly barricaded position. They were destroyed, with 700 gallons of beer.

Mrs. R. C. Knight was tendered a delightful surprise last night at her home at Dawson by a number of her friends. Mrs. Knight has been ill the greater part of the winter and while she has not recovered her health she is able to be about in the house. About thirty-five of her friends attended the party and at 10 o'clock a dainty luncheon was served. Out of town guests were Mrs. Harry Smith, Mrs. D. G. Wagoner, Mrs. Charles Stiles and daughter, Mary Mrs Elizabeth Walker, all of Connellsville; Mrs Helena Bittner of Pennsville and Mrs Clarence Harry and son, George, of Liberty.

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE

Don't Stay Gray! Here's an Old-time Receipe That Anybody Can Apply

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied, with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is messy and out of date. Nowadays, by asking at any drugs store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two it becomes beautifully dark and glossy—Advertisement.

DOCTORS WANTED TO OPERATE

Mrs. Quillon Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her from an Operation

Muskegon, Michigan.—"After doctoring for eight or nine years with different physicians without any relief at all, they said that that medicine would not reach my case and I should have an operation. I had heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and often saw it advertised in different papers where some women had suffered just as I did and got well and strong again by taking the Vegetable Compound. I decided to see what it would do for me, and before I had finished the fourth bottle I was much better, the weakness stopped and the severe pains in my sides left me. I am now much stronger and do my own work and work in the factory besides. I am still taking the Vegetable Compound and give it all the praise."—Mrs. NELLIE QUILLON, 17 Morris St., Muskegon, Mich.

Women should heed such warning symptoms as bearing-down pains and weakness, for they indicate some female trouble, and a persistent and faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will seldom fail to help.

St. Vincent Victor Over Legion; Casey Five Wins Bout With Railroaders

Leisenring Outfit Thereby Strengthens Hold on First Position.

BROWN HEAVY SCORER

Failing to exhibit the strength that it had showed during its previous two or three games, the Legion Five went down to defeat last evening on the High School floor before St. Vincent by the score of 29-20. The game was hard fought from the start to the finish as the Legion tossers were determined and confident that they could take the measure of the big green team. With this victory to its credit the Green outfit has all but clinched first place, having one more game to play and that with the Unity Fraternity five. If the Frat team wins it will leave St. Vincent tied for first place with the Casey outfit.

Alexander and A. Rusinko each scored five field goals for the Green team while Brown made 16 out of 20 points for the Legion.

The second game played between the Baltimore & Ohio Clerks and the Casey team, was a nip and tuck game the first half, the score being 15-11 favor Casey team, but the last two quarters the Casey Club stepped on the gas, and scored 16 points to the Clerks' 6. This victory leaves the Casey Club a half game behind the league leaders.

Nixon put up a good game for the losers and Pritchard and Henry were the Casey team's heavy scorers. The lineup:

STOMACH TROUBLES ARE DUE TO ACIDITY

Tells Safe, Certain, Speedy Relief For Acid Indigestion.

So-called stomach troubles, such as indigestion, gas, sourness, stomach-ache and inability to retain food are in probably nine cases out of ten simply evidence that excessive secretion of acid is taking place in the stomach, causing the formation of gas and acid indigestion.

Gas distends the stomach and causes that full, oppressive burning feeling sometimes known as heartburn, while the acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach. The trouble lies entirely in the excess development or secretion of acid.

To stop or prevent this souring of the food contents of the stomach and to neutralize the acid, and make it bland and harmless, a teaspoonful of Bisurated Magnesia, a good and effective corrector of acid stomach, should be taken in a quarter of a glass of hot or cold water after eating or whenever gas, sourness or acidity is felt. This sweetens the stomach and neutralizes the acidity in a few moments and is a perfectly harmless and inexpensive remedy to use.

An antiacid, such as Bisurated Magnesia which can be obtained from any druggist in either powder or tablet form enables the stomach to do its work properly without the aid of artificial digestents. Magnesia comes in several forms, so be certain to ask for and take only Bisurated Magnesia, which is especially prepared for the above purpose.—Advertisement.

PHIL DOUGLAS WILL PITCH FOR HORNELL

Former Giants' Star Signs to Twirl for Outlaw Team.

Not the First Big League Player to Sign With New York Club—Scott Perry, Former Athletic, Has Been There Two Years.

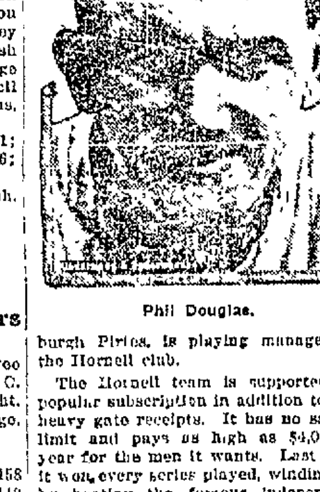

Announcement that Shufflin' Phil Douglas, banished spitballer of the New York Giants, will be one of the hurling staff of the Hornell team next summer, naturally focuses attention on what fans say is the real "red-hot" baseball town of the country.

Hornell is a thorn in the side of John J. Farrell, the minor league mentor, for it is an "outlaw" town and doesn't give a rap who knows it. Last year Farrell forbade all league teams from playing with Hornell and even black-listed other independent teams that played against Hornell. But Hornell didn't mind and went out and won the independent or "outlaw" championship of the country.

Phil Douglas is not the first star to sign with Hornell. Scott Perry, who was Connie Mack's pitching ace, has been in Hornell for two years, jumping there in 1921. He won 27 of the 31 games he pitched last summer while "Bugs" Hersche, formerly International leaguer, won 20 of the 21 he hurled.

Joe Harris, erstwhile of the Cleveland Indians, played in Hornell in 1921. Harris has since been reinstated by Judge Landis.

Jake Pitler, who jumped the Pittsburgh Pirates, is playing manager of the Hornell club.

Phil Douglas.

The Hornell team is supported by popular subscription in addition to the heavy gate receipts. It has no salary limit and pays as high as $4,000 a year for the men it wants. Last year it won every series played, winding up by beating the famous independent club at Shamokin, Pa., and then walloping George Textor's great club at Massillon, O., in seven out of ten games played.

Hornell has a population of only 18,000, but has become famous in baseball because of the big league team it supports.

PAY MILLIONS TO SEE RACES

Gate Receipts of Metropolitan Season of 1922 Were Estimated at $5,757,582.

Popularity of horse racing as one of the leading outdoor sports is attested by the fact that nearly $2,000,000 in total purse money was distributed during the 152 days of the metropolitan racing season at Jamaica, Belmont park, Aqueduct, Saratoga and Empire City.

The exact total of purses amounted to $1,919,191, a daily average of $12,620. On a conservative estimate that the gate receipts amounted to three times as much as the purse awards, the public paid $5,757,582 to see many of the turf's leading thoroughbreds in action during the 1922 season.

Saratoga, the longest meeting of the season with its 27 days, topped the purse awards with $402,297. The 13-day meeting at Belmont park led in the total amount of daily purses with $17,234, and in the amount of purse per race with $2,898.

The total purse money was shared by 783 horses, while best money went to 450. There were 2,739 winning starters out of 6,653. The season's program contained a total of 912 races.

Frank Roth, who a long time ago used to catch for Indianapolis, is to work with the pitchers of the Cleveland club this year. He is a brother of Bobby Roth.

"Hair-Groom" is a dignified combing cream which gives that natural gloss and well-groomed effect to your hair—that final touch to good dress both in business and on social occasions.

Greaseless, stainless "Hair-Groom" does not show on the hair because it is absorbed by the scalp, therefore your hair remains so soft and pliable and so natural that no one can possibly tell you used it.—Advertisement.

Big Changes at Stanford.

On the face of things Leland Stanford is to become a different institution. There may be changes in university administration—changes in professorial heads. But the big thing is that Glenn Warner goes there as football coach, the same Warner who brought Pittsburgh to the fore.

The big value of a football coach is not to develop football teams. That is a small part of his worth. But in doing so, he develops college spirit. He builds more than any other man about the university the idea that in the sound body is the sound mind. And these in the human inventory may be listed as the greatest of assets.

ONE MAN WORRIED DEMPSEY

Willie Meehan Proved to Be Troublesome to Champion on Two Different Occasions.

Every fistic champion can point to some certain fighter as his jinx. Usually the fighter is mediocre and he falls an easy victim to men who are no match for the champion.

Willie Meehan, the roly-poly heavyweight from the coast, is one of the few fighters who have proved troublesome to the champion, Jack Dempsey.

In their first engagement, back in 1917, Dempsey took down the decision in a four-round bout. The same year Meehan managed to get a draw with the champion in four rounds. The following year he won the decision over the four-round route.

All of which gives Meehan the distinction of being the one fighter to make progress against Dempsey, for after losing a decision he eked out a draw, then a win.

Dick Kerr, former star of the White Sox hurling staff, who quit the team last year for a semi-pro job, will pitch for the Kenosha team of the Mid-West Baseball league this season.

Rheumatic Agony

NOW EASILY ENDED

Says Mr. James H. Allen of Rochester, N. Y.

It does not matter to me whether you are disabled with cursed rheumatism or have only occasional twinges, I know that Allenrhu, my own discovery, will stop the agony, do away with the gnawing pains and reduce the swollen joints.

I know it will dissolve the uric acid deposits that have become deeply imbedded in joints and muscles and quickly drive every trace of rheumatism from your body. I know this because I was crippled for years and many times was unable to work, and Allenrhu made a well, robust, healthy man of me.

I know because since I cured myself, hundreds have taken Allenrhu and speedily rid themselves of this agonizing disease.

No matter how severe your case, I urge you to put your faith in the prescription that it took me years to perfect—a prescription that made a new man of me after doctors tried and failed.

Allenrhu is no laggard. It starts right in at once. It gets into the blood, searches out the poisonous uric acid deposit and in two days starts to drive the concentrated impurities that cause rheumatism, out of the body through the natural channels.

Through the columns of this newspaper, I authorize every druggist to guarantee one full pint bottle in every instance.—Advertisement.

A better motor lubricant

ATLANTIC Motor Oil has always been regarded as one of the finest products of its kind and day. Yet Atlantic engineers have never stopped with the belief that the limit of motor oil improvement has been reached.

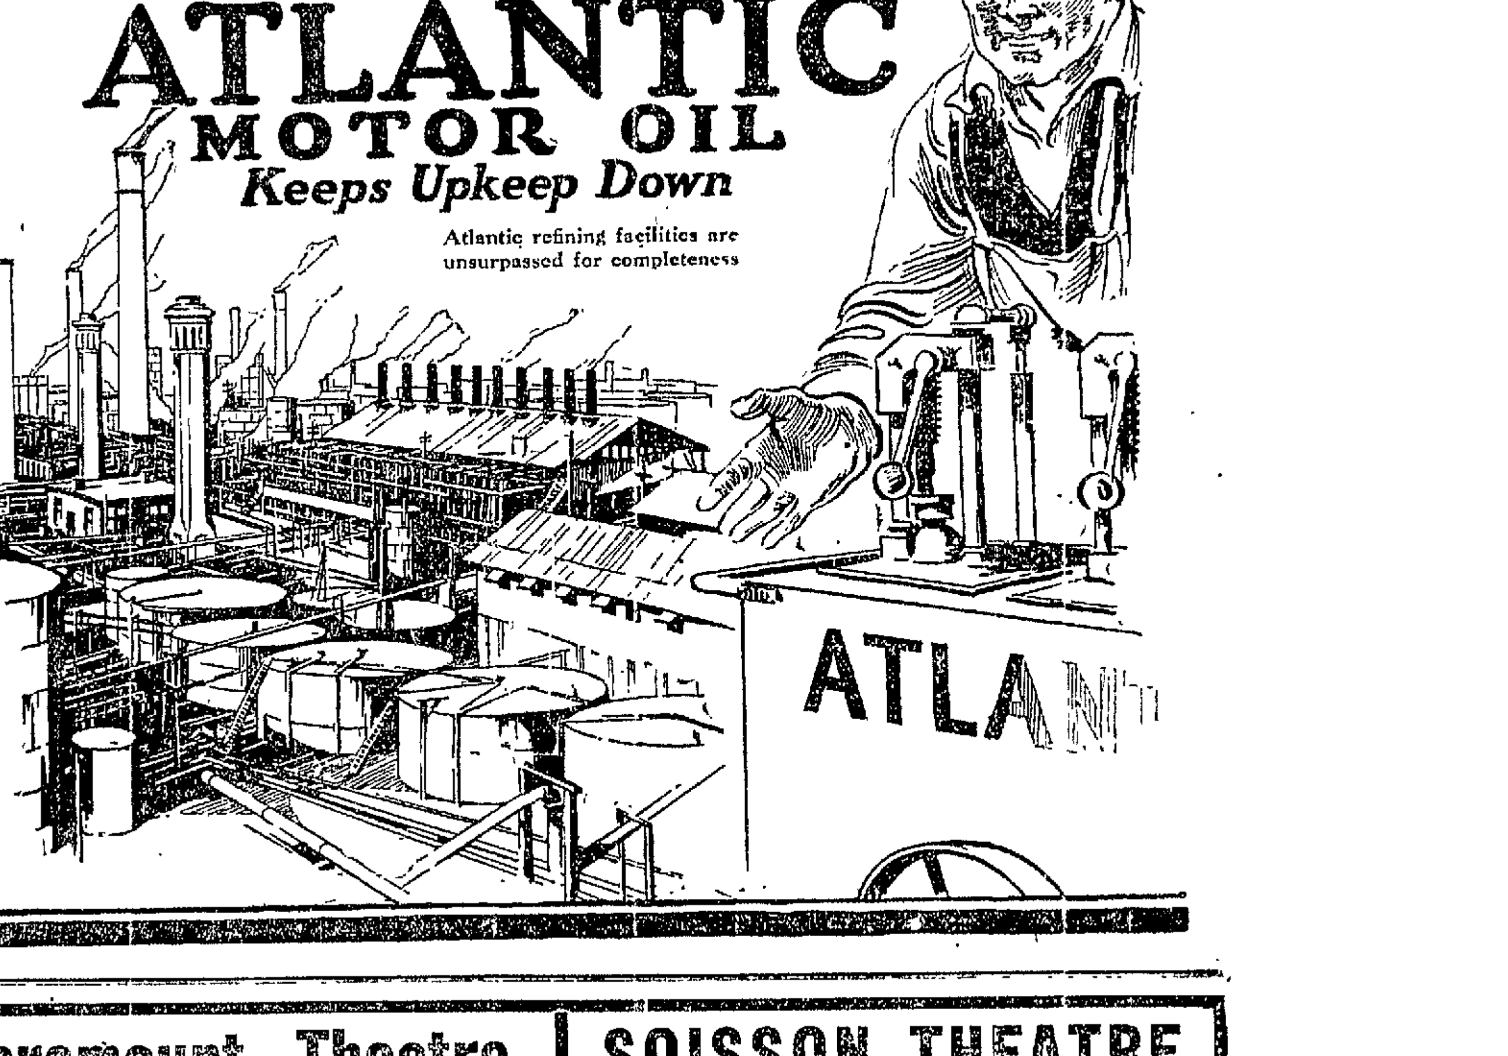

Not once have they relaxed in their study of changing motor construction and changing lubrication requirements; nor in their efforts to produce a still better motor lubricant.

They have succeeded! To-day they offer you an Atlantic Motor Oil that is better than ever—still farther ahead in the field of high-grade motor lubricants—an oil that is noticeably

Longer lasting;
Higher in heat resistance;
Better in piston sealing qualities;
More enduring under the constant attacks of friction, pressure and impact against the bearing surfaces;
Better in every way that makes for higher motor efficiency and greater operating and upkeep economy.

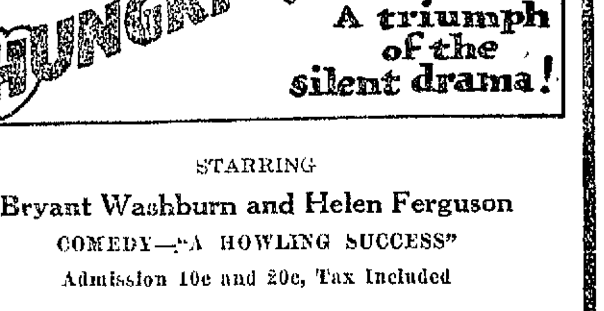

You cannot realize the utmost in motor lubrication until you have used this latest product of one of the oldest and most competent organizations in the oil refining industry.

THURSDAY EVE'G, MAR. 29, 1923.

TOO MANY BOARDS ON STATE'S PAYROLL ALREADY.

The claim of the proponents of a law requiring bituminous coal miners to submit to an examination before being granted a license to follow their occupation, that it will promote the safety of mine employes, is not supported by the experience gained since the application of a similar law in the anthracite field of Pennsylvania and the coal fields of Illinois. Statistics show that the loss of life in these districts is greater, on the basis of the number of men employed, and the production of coal per employe killed or injured, than in the bituminous districts of Pennsylvania.

The bituminous mining law of Pennsylvania has gone about as far as it is possible for any law to go in the matter of making the occupation safe. It is a fact known to all persons familiar with mining that a large percentage of the casualties happen to men of experience who, because of the immunity they may have long enjoyed, are willing to take risks which often result fatally. They do things prohibited by the mining law and orders of the mine foreman because of their disinclination to take the time necessary to provide safety precautions. This is particularly true of posting working places both in room and pillar drawing work. The result, year after year, is that more accidents are caused by falls of roof than all other mine hazards combined.

A system of examinations and licenses will not correct such a condition. In fact, the possession of a license, which the holder will regard as a certificate of competency and authority from the state, will create that frame of mind which will cause the more obstinate miners to feel that the mine foreman has no authority or right to give orders as to how a working place should be posted, or other precautions taken to insure the safety of the worker. The tendency will be to make discipline much more difficult to be enforced and the accident rate will increase instead of decrease.

Again, the creation of a bituminous miners' examination board will be providing soft jobs for a large number of people and the taxpayer's burden will be made still heavier. We have too many boards, commissions, bureaus and what-not already. The part of wisdom would be to reduce instead of increase their number. That being the temper of the present state administration and the taxpayers of the state it is to be hoped the Legislature will not be induced by false logic and reasoning, or otherwise, to consent to any plan for the multiplication of examining boards or other means of further cluttering up the state payroll.

MORE BUSINESS IN LAW-MAKING.

Now that the Legislature has disposed of the prohibition enforcement bill, consideration of which retarded the progress of business in both the Senate and the House, the time has arrived for the members to devote their attention to unfinished matters and with such diligence as will enable them to conclude the session just as promptly as possible.

More or less uncertainty always prevails throughout the state as long as the Legislature is in session. There is the ever present possibility that some of the freak bills that are introduced every session will be considered seriously and the time of the members wasted when they should be devoting their energies to sifting out the bills that are desirable or necessary to be passed and pushing them through.

There are problems of sufficient importance yet to be solved to occupy the attention of lawmakers without them wandering off into the realm of experimental legislation. The financing of the public schools and making adequate provision for State College; enacting the budget into law; reorganizing the state departments with a view of promoting greater efficiency and economy in administration; adoption of a new method of making appropriations to charitable institutions, are all big questions -so big, in fact, that a proper solution will require very careful study and close application on the part of legislators.

A number of the projects named have been discussed more or less since the Legislature has been in session, and there is no reason why they cannot be disposed of very promptly. Aside from those enumerated, and a few other measures, there is no crying need for very many new laws being enacted. The committees should not hesitate to cast aside all bills of doubtful value or utility and unceremoniously consign to pigeon holes all those that smack of untried, dangerous or iniquitous features.

The people of the state expect more business in law-making just as they expect more business in government and less government in business.

MARCH TERM OF CRIMINAL COURT COMES TO CLOSE

F. C. Sandusky, Former Connellsville Man, Guilty of Motor Law Violation.

OLIVER OFFICERS FREED

The March term of criminal court in Uniontown came to a close early Wednesday afternoon. The majority of the jurors were discharged before the noon recess. There were two juries sitting following the noon recess but these cases were disposed of early in the afternoon.

F. C. Sandusky, of Braddock and formerly of Connellsville, was convicted by a jury yesterday afternoon before Judge J. Q. Van Swearingen on charges of violating the automobile laws by striking a buggy driven by H. R. Cole, near Connellsville. Cole testified that he was driving down a hill last August when the defendant struck his buggy and drove on without offering any assistance. He said the shaft and wheel of his buggy were damaged. He claimed that the defendant was under the influence of liquor.

The defendant testified that his brother-in-law was driving the car and that the brakes were bad and they could not stop the car until they reached the bottom of the hill and everything appeared to be all right then. The driver of the car corroborated the defendant in his testimony but claimed that the defendant was not drunk, although he believed he had been drinking. When he became anxious to talk District Attorney Miller advised him that if he wanted to he could go ahead and make a speech. "Where shall I begin?" he inquired, and Mr. Miller replied "anywhere." "Then I will start at the very beginning," he replied and started upon his speech. After he had proceeded at a rapid fire rate counsel for the defendant intimated that it was not very interesting but the court nodded for the speaker to continue and without the apparent loss of a single breath he continued for several minutes longer and then exclaimed "that's all."

A nol pros was entered yesterday in the case of John M. Rolfe and F. J. Bishop charged with robbery by Joseph Campbell of Oliver No. 1. The defendants were convicted at the last term of court but a new trial was granted.

John Ridgway was acquitted by a jury before Judge E. H. Reppert on charges of violating the automobile laws but directed to pay one-fourth of the costs, the remainder being placed on the prosecutor, S. C. Cowan.

150 Years Since First Shipment of Coal Was Made in Western Pa.

Coal mining on a commercial scale in western Pennsylvania began just 150 years ago, the first mine having begun shipment on January 11, 1773. It was located at Finleyville, in Washington county, and at the height of its prosperity employed 30 men, some of whom were engaged in hauling mine cars to the surface, as mules had not then come into use.

The mine was in operation for 11 years and was abandoned when an adjoining property owner went to court and restrained the owners from removing any more coal from under his land, because the surface was being damaged by cave-ins.

IDEAL IS FOUND BY MRS. CHAS. G. AUER, OF BETHLEHEM, PA.

Now Fully Restored, She Declares Tanlac Is the Perfect Stomach Medicine.

"My experience has convinced me that Tanlac is the ideal stomach medicine," recently stated Mrs. Charles G. Auer, 19 Spring St., Bethlehem, Pa.

"Before taking Tanlac, I had an awful time with indigestion for months—not sick enough to stay in bed, but just so distressed and miserable all the time. A bite or two for breakfast was all I could eat the whole day and, oh, how I did suffer from gas on my stomach. I always got up mornings with bad ache, and my condition had me fearfully nervous, too.

Three bottles of Tanlac, just half the full treatment has relieved me of every sign of stomach trouble and given me a wonderful appetite. I now thoroughly enjoy my three hearty meals a day and my digestion seems perfect. Tanlac helped me back to good health, peace and comfort and I will never forget it."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35-million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

THE COST OF NAVAL FORCES

Three Nations Spent $717,566,552 in Last Year, Say Official Figures.

Official figures recently issued show the total expenditures for armed naval forces of the United States, Great Britain and France for the last year, based on normal rates of exchange, were $717,566,552.

The figures compiled for expenditures by the United States include everything in the nature of naval outlay, even the administrations of Samoa, Guam and the Virgin Islands.

United States figures are for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, while those for France are for the calendar year. For the three countries, the totals were:

United States, $350,000,000.
Great Britain, £64,883,700.
France, 797,804,914 francs.

Assuming the normal rate of exchange of $4.87 for the pound sterling and 19 cents for the French franc, the totals in dollars are:

United States	$350,000,000
Great Britain	315,983,619
France	151,582,933

The figures for the United States include new construction, and sums appropriated the year previous, but not used and applied to this year. It is understood the figures for France and Great Britain cover similar items. France is able to run her navy more cheaply because of the lower wages paid seamen.

The estimated expenditure for the American navy for 1923 will be $347,074,369.

The expenditure of Great Britain for the year previous to the fiscal period closing June 30, 1922, was £83,445,000. That of France for the calendar year 1921 was 1,034,560,000 francs.

LOCAL MANAGER GLAD TO TESTIFY

Relates his experience with new herbal remedy "Dreco." Had indigestion, gas on stomach and pimples on face.

A special representative from the Dreco Laboratory is now located at Connellsville Drug Company. Call to see him. Free samples given.

The great herbal remedy Dreco is growing daily in popularity because of its certain action on the stomach, liver, kidneys, bladder, bowels and the blood. Its powers are great to relieve constipation, dizziness, headaches, gas in the stomach, backache and other symptoms. Many people testify as to the results obtained for instance,

MR. WM. LEEDS, JR.

Mr. Wm. Leeds, Jr., residing at 300 Zara street, Pittsburg and who is local manager for the large St. Paul Manufacturing Company recently said, "For a long time I have suffered from stomach trouble and seemed I could not get permanent relief. After eating I'd feel full and bloated from gas, would have acid risings in my throat and a choking sensation.

"Guess my liver was sluggish also for every morning I'd have a vile taste in my mouth and a coating on my tongue. My face was broken out with pimples.

"I have taken two bottles of Dreco and have obtained grand relief. My stomach was soothed from the very start and soon I could tell the acid condition was relieved which ended the burning in my throat and choking feeling. I never have the gas any more and the pimples have disappeared from my face. My liver has been purged thoroughly, in fact Dreco has set me right again so I am glad to tell others about this excellent remedy."

Dreco does not contain iron, mercury, potash, acids or oils, but is made from the juices and extracts of many herbal plants which combined with the juices of the stomach very pleasantly and act on the vital organs.

Go today to Connellsville Drug Company, ask for Mr. Smith, the well known Dreco expert, and he will courteously explain the merits of this great remedy. There is no charge and he will tell you if he believes Dreco will benefit you.

CANCER CURABLE IF PRECAUTIONS ARE TAKEN EARLY

Initial Symptoms of the Dread Malady Can Easily Be Detected.

ORIGIN IS ALWAYS LOCAL

NEW YORK, March 29.—Dr. Frederic A. Besley, chairman of the Illinois State Committee of the American Society for the Control of Cancer, recently prepared an article on this dread disease which will prove helpful to the public in detecting the initial symptoms of the malady. He gives other facts of vital interest. In the course of the article Dr. Besley says:

"Cancer is definitely on the increase in all civilized countries. Last year nearly 100,000 people died of cancer in the United States and in Illinois over 6,000 people succumbed to this malady. More people died of cancer in Illinois in 1921 than of tuberculosis in all its forms. One in every eight women over 40 years of age dies of cancer, and one in every 12 men over 40 years of age dies of cancer. It is obvious that an intense effort on the part of both the lay public and the medical profession must be made to check the mortality and morbidity of cancer.

"The principal object of this presentation is to make it clear that cancer is curable and to acquaint you with some of the early signs and symptoms of the disease and to invite and emphatically urge the cooperation of the laity in bringing these cases to the notice of well-trained and scientific medical men early in their course, to the end that many who now suffer and die may be saved.

"It may be stated with positiveness that cancer is not contagious and it is highly probable that it is not hereditary in the ordinary sense of the word. Cancer is not a loathsome disease. It is not a venereal disease and it is not a disease that reflects any disgrace upon the individual who has it, and, therefore, it should be freely discussed, both in the concrete case and in the abstract.

"It is probable that irritations of any kind on the surface of the body or in the hollow organs act as predisposing factors to the growth. The rough edge of a tooth, a pipe-stem irritating the lip, very hot fluids or foods taken into the stomach should be avoided because of the possibility of their harmful effects.

"It can be stated with definiteness and positiveness that cancer always begins as a local disease and is capable of cure in a very large percentage of cases in the early stages. Cancer rarely begins before 35 years of age and little apprehension need be felt before this period of life. In later life any mole or wart on the surface of the body demands immediate attention, particularly if it begins to grow larger. A persistent ulcer or sore which does not tend to heal occurring on the face, lip, tongue, or inside of the mouth should excite your suspicion and you should consult your family doctor at once. A continued indigestion with loss of weight occurring in advanced life demands the most careful investigation by a competent medical man.

"Continued chronic constipation with loss of weight is significant. One of the earliest signs of a beginning cancer is an abnormal flow of blood from any of the hollow organs and it is particularly suggestive when it occurs at irregular times and is profuse. If such a hemorrhage occurs do not delay, but consult at once your medical adviser and he will institute an examination extensive enough to determine the exact cause of such bleeding and will apply the proper treatment for its permanent cure. Abnormal bleeding is one of the earliest and most essential signs of cancer.

"The discovery of any lump or swelling or growth in the breast, especially coming on later in life, demands a careful investigation, for it may be potentially a cancer and its early and complete removal is the only safe assurance against disastrous results. Even an experienced surgeon cannot be positive of the nature of such a swelling without the opportunity of an examination after its removal.

"In the present state of our knowledge it can be affirmed that cancer is at first a local disease and the most efficient method of cure is early removal by extensive operation performed by a competent and well-trained surgeon.

"X-ray and radium have a most beneficial effect upon superficial cancer and they are valuable adjuncts to surgery, but from our present experience, surgery offers the best hope of a lasting cure in most locations. Caustics and pastes of all kinds are only mentioned to be condemned.

"In concluding, let me convey this real message of hope. Cancer always begins as a local disease and it can be cured in a very large majority of cases when seen early and carefully removed. The medical profession recognizes its limitations in working alone and we are now earnestly soliciting your coöperation and support in stamping out this malady."

STEEL TURN OVER SHOWS DECREASE; OUTPUT RATE HIGH

Almost Equal to the Best Touched in War Time, and above that in Month of March, 1920.

Special to The Weekly Courier.

NEW YORK, March 28.—The American Metal Market and Daily Iron & Steel Report will review the steel and iron trade tomorrow as follows:

The turnover in finished steel products in the open market has continued to decrease. The full range of market prices shows a wide spread. The great bulk of the sales are at the higher prices in the general spread, the lower prices having become largely nominal, either because the mills holding them officially refuse to sell at them or because the delivery involved is too late to interest buyers.

There are many sales of bars and shapes at well above 2.50c, while sales of black sheets are more common towards the 4.00c limit than towards the price of 3.60c, at which some mills covered customers for second quarter.

Steel production continues at a very high rate, nearly, if not equal to the best rate touched during the war, and above the rate of March, 1920, hitherto the post-war high rate. The common view is that the heavy deliveries should be telling upon the market, but thus far the market has not lost its edge, as consumers are urging mills to make heavier deliveries on old orders, while some are paying very substantial delivery premiums. The scrap market has perhaps reached its top, but it usually turns upwards or downwards some time before the finished steel market.

As has been expected for a couple months past, Lake Superior ore prices for the 1923 season are 50 cents up, restoring the 1921 schedule. The initial sales, developing the market, occurred in Cleveland last Saturday. The advance is predicted upon the advance in pig iron, our composite showing over $5 rise in pig iron in general since the turning point at the middle of last December. The pig iron markets are strong this week but in general, are less active.

Tin plate has sold in fair size tonnages at $6.00. Large consumers are more or less covered for the half year at $4.75, but the outlook is that there will not be enough tin plate to go around.

Greatest Sculptures Ever Executed.

The most important of the famous "Elgin Marbles" are the sculptures of the Parthenon, or temple of Athene Parthenos (the Virgin), the patron goddess of Athens, which stood on the Acropolis. In 1801-3, Thomas Bruce, seventh earl of Elgin, British ambassador to the Porte, collected numerous sculptures at Athens, which he saw being daily destroyed, and in 1816 sold them to the British government. They are now in the "Elgin room" in the British museum. The collection includes sculptures, not only from the Parthenon, but from the Erechtheion and elsewhere, and casts from marbles which were left in situ. These casts, compared with later casts, show that damage to the originals went on after Lord Elgin's time. The sculptures of the Parthenon are both traditionally and generally held to be the greatest sculptures ever executed.

One-Man Shop Always Open.

A Greenwich Village shoemaker has devised a method for receiving shoes for repair when his shop is closed. His innovation consists of a large hole in the door on the principle of a letter slot.

"Since I adopted the scheme," he said, "my repair shop has doubled. No matter what hours you keep your shop open there's some one who can come only at another time.

"Now these people drop their shoes through my door slot with written instructions for the repairs. They also tell me when they will call for the shoes, and I can get them ready accordingly."—New York Sun.

Antidote for Boredom.

While prime minister of England Lloyd George devised an antidote for boredom. When he was entertaining or being entertained he arranged to have himself called on the telephone at certain intervals. If the company was dull he discovered at the first ring that affairs of state demanded his attention.

If the company was passable he waited for the second ring. If he found himself among kindred spirits, the calls were in regard to matters that his secretary could bring to a happy conclusion.

At the Theatres

THE PARAMOUNT.

"Hungary Hearts," the leading picture today at this theatre presents an all star cast. The picture an adaptation by Goldwyn of Anzia Yezierska's volume of short stories of New York life, published under the same title. The book created something of a sensation upon the publication two years ago, for a truer, more vivid picture of immigration life has seldom been presented. In the process of transference to the screen the atmosphere of the original stories has been retained with remarkable fidelity by both the director, E. Mason Hooper, and the scenarist.

"Hungary Hearts" is a dramatic, soul-stirring picture; but by no means is it all pathos and tears. Delightful humor abounds in both situations and titles which were written in part by Montague Glass, creator of "Potash and Perlmutter."

Friday and Saturday Richard Talmadge will be seen in "Wildcat Jordan."

THE SOISSON.

"THE YOSEMITE TRAIL," showing today, Friday and Saturday at this theatre, presents Dustin Farnum on one of the most interesting roles of his career. In the mining country of the Yosemite region the strong friendship between Jim Thorpe and his cousin, Ned Henderson, was frequently discussed. Thorpe, the older of the two, was more favored among the miners. Thorpe had sought gold for years. At last fortune began to smile on him and Jim gave his cousin an equal share. Then came Eve Marshant, young and pretty. She wanted the solitude of the woods in which to write a book. Gradually Thorpe came to love her. Then he learned that Ned Henderson was attracted by the girl. They agreed that each should have an equal opportunity to win her. It was left to chance to decide who would first pop the question. Jim won, and was to see Eve in the morning. Then she told him that Ned had stolen a march on him the previous night, and that she had agreed to marry the younger man. Although stunned by the news, Thorpe said: "I hope you will be happy. Ned's a good boy." Then he left. But deep resentment against Henderson burned in his soul.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Katharine MacDonald will be seen in an interesting production.

THE ORPHEUM.

"EBB-TIDE," which opened today at this theatre for a three-day attraction, is a gripping story of unfortunate men who reach thrilling climaxes in their lives in the adventurous South Seas. Strange is the trio of men on the beach at Papeete, Tahiti, one an Oxford scholar who has "made a success of failure"; the second, a mean, slimy, totally bad ex-London clerk, and the third, a mariner, whose ship piles on the rocks while he was drunk in his berth. They are on the ebb tide of life when the story opens—derelicts—and strange are the adventures they experience before the story ends. That the picture has been done in the big way it deserves is assured by an all-star cast, which comprises James Kirkwood, Lila Lee, Noah Beery, George Fawcett, Robert Hatton and Jacqueline Logan.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week Gloria Swanson will be seen in an interesting Paramount attraction.

Superstitions of Thieves.

A laundryman who for eleven years used his coffin as a safe, was wise in his generation, for it is not believed that any thief would have meddled with such a receptacle. Certainly no professional burglar would have touched it.

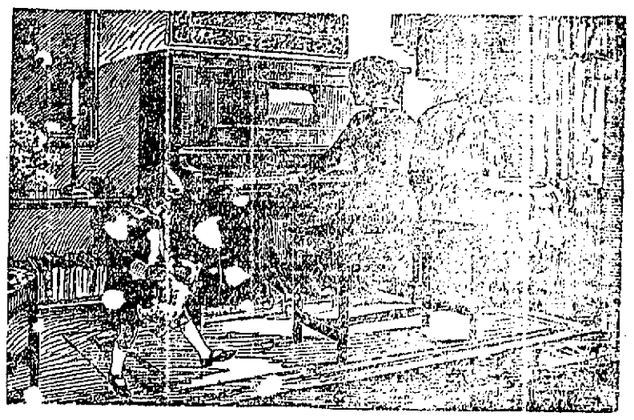

For the criminal classes, almost without exception, are steeped in queer beliefs in luck, omens and the like.

The burglar carefully avoids any house where a death has recently taken place. Anything black is anathema to him. The black cat, which to some people is an omen of good fortune, to him is just the reverse. Should a black cat be seen sitting on the steps or sill of a house marked down for plunder he will avoid it. Another animal which terrifies him is a blind dog.

TRADE COMMISSION CONTINUING FIGHT FOR QUESTIONNAIRE

Preparing Bill of Exceptions to Final Injunction in Maynard Coal Case.

RULED AGAINST TWICE

Including the Claire Furnace Case, Body Is Determined to Carry Question of Its Right to Demand Productions Cost to the Highest Court.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—The Federal Trade Commission has begun the preparation of a bill of exceptions to the final decree of Justice Jennings Bailey of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia making permanent the injunction restraining the commission from requiring the Maynard Coal Company to furnish monthly cost of production reports. This step is a necessary preliminary to taking the case to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, the commission having noted an appeal which was allowed by Justice Bailey. It is expected that it will be at least a month before the bill of exceptions is filed, says Coal Review.

Justice Bailey's decision was the formal order on a verbal decision adverse to the commission given recently and makes permanent the temporary injunction granted them. The decision not only permanently prohibits the commission from exacting production cost data from the coal mining industry, but nullifies the default order issued by the commission in 1920 to invoke the penalty for non-compliance with the commission's instructions, and assesses the cost of the action upon the commission. As in the Claire Furnace iron, steel and coke cost-reporting case, the court has held that the commission exceeded its authority in demanding production cost data.

Justice Bailey's decision was the second defeat for the commission in its efforts to get cost figures on basic materials.

Three years ago the Claire Furnace Company, of Pennsylvania, obtained an injunction against the commission when it sought to get at steel production costs and, as a result, compilation of statistics was stopped and the funds appropriated for the work by Congress turned back into the treasury.

In both the Maryland and Claire Furnace cases Justice Bailey held that cost of production figures did not concern in any way interstate commerce and, therefore, Congress had no authority to compel companies to report them to the Trade Commission.

The Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia upheld Justice Bailey's decision in the Claire furnace case, and the commission has announced its intention to appeal the case to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Maynard coal case has also been in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for three years, but the groundwork was laid on August 25, 1919, when members of the House Appropriations Committee asked representatives of the commission what steps could be taken to combat the high cost of living. The commission's representatives suggested that the initial action be a study of the production costs of basic commodities. In the Act of November 4, 1919, an appropriation of $150,000 was granted the commission for this purpose.

On December 15, 1919, the commission adopted a resolution setting forth its determination to procure cost data relating to coal, coke, iron, steel and other commodities. Between January 5 and 9, 1920, the commission notified about 2,500 bituminous coal producers that it expected them to submit monthly cost reports. Opposition crystallized, and on January 31, 1920, the commission made formal demand upon the Maynard Coal Company. To provide the basis for a test case the default notice authorized by the Federal Trade Act was served on March 3, 1920. Exactly one week later the bill was filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and notice given of the motion for a temporary injunction. On March 16, the commission filed its answer. Three days later Justice Bailey handed down his opinion that a temporary injunction was warranted, and on March 21, 1920, the temporary injunction was formally granted.

The case remained inactive, with with the commission restrained in the meantime, until May 31, 1922, when the commission filed an amended answer. In the interim the Claire furnace injunction had been granted and was proceeding through the court. On June 5 counsel for the Maynard Coal Company moved to strike out the amended answer, which January 30, 1923. Then on March 6 was granted by Justice Bailey on Justice Bailey made the temporary injunction permanent. Although the commission plans to speed the case into the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia it probably will not be argued there before next fall.

Coke Market Quiets Down But Without Loss of Any Of Its Inherent Strength

Export Price Ranges $7.25 to $7.50; Spot Is Same With $7.50 Asking Figure.

ONE THIRD QUARTER SALE

Made at $7.50, an Advance of 25c Over Second Quarter Covered by Same Contract; Pittsburg Coal Is Declining; Ore Up 50c, Iron Going.

Special to The Weekly Courier.

PITTSBURG, March 28.—The coke market has been quieting down in the past week after the recent exciting events. The second quarter contract business appears to have been completed, while a few days have elapsed without any export inquiry developing.

The coke market has not lost any of its inherent strength, but it has failed to develop strength expected a week ago, when operators were talking of prices that were expected rather than realized. There had been export business at $7.25, with $7.50 occasionally paid to round out cargoes, and some operators seized upon this $7.50 as the minimum, thereupon calling the market $7.50 to $7.75. While a few sales may have been made at about $7.50 there was nothing like a general movement, and the spot market is now quotable at $7.25 to $7.50. While this is a decline on paper it represents a higher level than obtained at the end of February, when the second quarter contracting movement began. The spot market then stood at $7.00 to $7.25.

Late last week the largest independent steel interest in the Pittsburg district bought a round lot of spot coke, on account of a small accident at its coke plant, and withdrew from the market again. This week there has been practically no inquiry for spot coke from furnaces. A number of operators have been offering coke, with an asking price of $7.50, but leaving the trade in no doubt that a furnace bidding $7.25 could secure moderate sized tonnages at least.

Foundry coke has been showing rather wide range in prices, instead of settling down to a definite level. For several weeks the market has been quotable at $8.25 to $8.75, to cover the great bulk of the transactions, but there have been occasional sales at outside this range, both at $8.00 and at $9.00. It is largely a question of brand, which does not always mean a question of quality, since there are some consumers who insist on getting certain brands when there are other brands in the market just as good, only the consumer has not learned the fact by actual experience.

An interesting fact, withheld at the time, may now be stated. That is, that one of the second quarter coke contracts made recently carried with it an equal tonnage of third quarter coke, prices being respectively $7.25 for second quarter and $7.50 for third quarter. The tonnage was enough to take care of a fair sized furnace.

Thus the bald fact is that the initial sale of third quarter coke has already been made, although the general buying movement has not begun and may not begin for some time still. While there may be various theories as to what price coke ought to sell at for third quarter, the fact is that a transaction has gone through at $7.50, while the average of all sales for second quarter was not far from $7.10. The last second quarter transaction reported, however, was at approximately $7.50. Thus there is circumstantial evidence that the contract market is now quotable at $7.50 flat, on the basis of actual sales. The market as a whole stands as follows:

Spot furnace	$7.25@$7.50
Contract furnace	$7.50
Spot foundry	$8.25@$8.75

The Pittsburg district coal market has had quite a decline in the past week. While industrial consumption is heavy there is very little demand in the open market. It is said that but for the recent export demand some mines in the district would have had to close ere this. Steam coal in spot lots has been generally available at $3.00, with gas coal at $2.75 to $3.00, representing its recent differential above steam grade. The district has been running under the Garfield scale of late 1919, formulated to settle the strike of November 1, 1919, and this scale runs to April 1, 1924. Under the Garfield scale coal has averaged much above $2.00, but twice the market has been lower, in June, 1921, at about $1.85, and in the fore part of March, 1923, at about $1.90. In general, $2.00 is held by operators to be below cost, even with a moderately full operation. If so it is much below cost now, as the Geological Survey weekly reports have been showing the rail mine production of the Pittsburg district for a couple months past to have been running at around 30 per cent of the total rated capacity of the mines.

Lake Superior iron ore prices have been developed for the 1923 season at the expected advance of 50 cents over last season's prices, thus restoring the 1921 schedule. The event has no influence on the pig iron market, as it was fully expected, the advance being indeed based on the advance the pig iron market had already experienced.

At last report basic and foundry iron in the Valley market were on the verge of advancing from $30 to $31, furnace, and the advance has since been fully established, Bessemer remaining at $31. Furnaces have been predicting further advances, to $32 or $33 before the movement should end, but demand has been light in the last few days. The market is quotable as follows:

Bessemer	$31.00
Basic	$31.00
Foundry	$31.00
Malleable	$31.00

These prices are f. o. b. Valley furnaces, freight to Pittsburg being $1.77.

CONQUERED THE WART HOG

"Flivver" Proved Too Much for Pugnacious South African Animal Who Objected to Its Presence.

The wild animals of South Africa do not take kindly to such new-fangled ideas as "flivvers," as the following incident, related by William McStay, historian of H. A. Snow's expedition, which has been hunting big game from a motor car, will show:

"The wart hog, whose name fairly well describes his appearance, fought Snow's machine to a standstill; to the beast, the 'fliv' was a new form of enemy. Snow encountered the wart hog one day in driving a path across the trackless waste. For amusement the explorer chased the hog quite a distance, when, with suddenness and ferocity, the beast turned to attack. With slavering jowls and grunting defiance the wart hog hurled itself against the trusty flivver, the only carrier not susceptible to the death bite of the tse-tse fly. Its tusks ripped the tires. Its hard head battered the radiator.

"Backward reeled the Tin Lizzie, trembling in every member. Forward she lunged again, thwacking the animal in broad beam. The latter charged anew, again she retreated and again she lunged like a gasoline billygoat. Finally the wart hog gave up the struggle and went and sat down afar off, watching the new enemy it could not conquer. The beast's attitude of dejection was sufficient to cause laughter."

PRISON FOR SWEDISH "VAGS"

Government Plans Hard Labor Sentence for Habitual Hoboes.

Habitual hoboes in Sweden will hereafter go to work or be sentenced to enforced labor for two or three years, if the recommendations submitted by the government committee on legislation for the care of the poor are adopted.

A person liable to arrest as a vagrant would first be warned by the local authorities. At the same time they must try to find work and lodging for the vagrant.

If the person reverts to vagrancy and again makes himself liable to arrest, he may be sentenced to enforced labor. For good behavior he may be released on probation, and will be helped to establish himself in a gainful occupation.

The committee further recommends that women of low repute be treated as vagrants, though it is held every effort should be made to redeem them to orderly life through the work of social institutions, especially organized for this purpose.

Region Forges Ahead From Week to Week, Adding More Ovens and Swelling Output

Gains Last Week Were 608 Ovens and 5,030 Tons; Total, 290,210.

PLANT IDLE FOUR YEARS

Is Restored to Activity; Region as A Whole Closely Approaching Maximum Capacity With Present Effective Equipment of Plants and Ovens.

From The Weekly Courier.

The coke region continues to forge ahead steadily from week to week, adding to the number of plants and ovens in blast and increasing the output in almost direct proportion to the augmentation of production facilities.

Last week 608 ovens, including part of the equipment of three long idle plants, were placed in running and the output boosted by 5,030 tons to another new high figure—290,210 tons. These additions were made necessary to take care of the larger demand, which in part results from the call for the coke for export, and to rounding out the requisitions on account of contracts covering the closing first quarter. The requirements under contract for the second quarter being quite definitely known, and exceeding those now current, the enlargement of production is in part in preparation for the quarter which begins with the ensuing week.

The marked change in conditions, as compared with the opening of the year, has come about without any undue excitement or too great eagerness on the part of producers to swell their production. The growth in demand has been fairly steady and rather evenly distributed, hence there has been no occasion for spurts of speed or over-exertion to meet the situation. The policy of the operators has been characterized by a safe conservatism, the wisdom of which is becoming more and more apparent.

It is interesting and instructive as well to note at this time just what progress the region has made toward complete resumption. Of the 141 plants in the region, 114, or 80.8 per cent, are now producing coke. Of these active 55 are running every oven in their equipment and 59 are in partial operation. Of the 27 plants which are idle a number are really permanently out of commission or in need of very extensive repairs, or are lacking a coal reserve sufficient to warrant firing up at this time. Six plants with oven equipment have been devoted to the shipment of raw exclusively so long that they have ceased to be rated as coking operations. Of the plants in partial operation the older ones are running about all the ovens it has been found convenient or desirable to keep in blast.

From the market standpoint it is significant to consider a comparison between the merchant and the furnace operations. Of the 80 plants of the former 69, or 85 per cent, are making coke, 38 running in full and 31 in part, with 11 out of blast. Of the six independent furnace plants four, or 66.6 per cent, are active, two with 100 per cent and two with more than 70 per cent of their ovens producing. Two plants are shipping raw coal.

The H. C. Frick Coke Company is running 15 plants in full and 26 from 50 to 99 per cent full, a total of 41 active, or 74.6 per cent, of its equipment of 55 operations. The remainder comprises 14 plants, six of which are confined to shipping 90,000 to 100,000 tons of coal each week by barge to the Clairton by-product plant, and nine more or less obsolete or without ample coal supply.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the region is closely approaching its maximum productive capacity on the basis of its existing effective equipment. Of course there are more ovens that could be placed in a fit condition to make coke that are not being used, but there is at present no indication that this will be necessary unless there be an expansion in demand over present proportions.

The estimated production of coke during the week ending Saturday, March 24, was 290,210 tons, divided between the two districts as follows: Connellsville, 153,620, an increase of 1,540 tons; Lower Connellsville, 136,590, an increase of 3,190 tons, or a total increase of 5,030 tons, as compared with an increase of 4,650 tons during the preceding week.

By interests the production was: Furnace, 165,480, a gain of 1,770 tons; merchant, 124,730, a gain of 3,260 tons, as compared with gains of 1,370 and 3,280 tons respectively during the week ended March 17.

The oven additions of 608 were quite evenly divided between the operating interests, 311 at furnaces and 297 at merchant plants. The former were all at Frick plants as follows:

Adelaide, 60; Central, 105, both of which have been idle almost a year; Continental No. 1, 10; Davidson, 12; Hecla No. 2, five; Leisenring No. 1, six; Lemont No. 2, 15; Mutual, 20, Redstone, three, Trotter, five; United, 15; Buffington, 35; Colonial No. 1, five; Colonial No. 4, five; Footedale, 21.

The most significant addition to the merchant list was 105 ovens at the Champion plant of the Champion Gas Coal Company, formerly Bosco, which has not been a coke producer for more than four years. Other merchant additions were Donald [illegible] and 2, 21, La Belle, 15, Mt. Hope, 50, Rich Hill, six; Sackett 30, Sterling 15, [illegible]; 14; Yokon, 8.

LITTLE NOW GOES TO WASTE

Science Has Discovered Innumerable Methods for Turning Rubbish to Profitable Uses.

One of the most remarkable features of modern life is that nothing need be wasted.

Science has discovered ways of turning every kind of rubbish into something useful. Refuse is burned in specially constructed furnaces, and the heat produced is turned into steam which is used for driving the dynamos that produce electric light. Even the ashes are used to make cement.

Soapsuds, which formerly polluted our rivers, are now strained, mixed with lime, and pressed into bricks, which, when burned, give three times the amount of heat that a similar quantity of coal gas would produce.

A dead horse can be put to almost endless uses. The hair is turned into hair-cloth and stuffing for mattresses; the hide forms leather table coverings; the tendons are made into glue and gelatine; the flesh is used as food for cats and dogs, and the blood is manufactured into prussiate of potash and manure. The bones reappear as knifehandles.

Jelly has been made from old boots and whisky from old shirts. Sawdust can be made into quite eatable cakes, and fish-scales into artificial pearls.

Aristotle's Philosophy.

Aristotle has been called a practical philosopher. A better designation would be a philosopher of facts. He sought for facts everywhere in nature. Thus he began, under his father, and he continued to be all his life, a student of nature. When he mistook her he wrote down wrong conclusions, but he really mistook her seldom. In consequence, very many of the things he wrote four centuries before Christ are true today. Nature's laws being unchangeable lead only one way, and on that way her modern pupil and her classical Aristotle meet.—New York Herald.

Judge Grants Divorce To Hubby of London's "Best-Dressed" Woman

LONDON—"The woman who spends every cent she can get of her husband's money for clothes is an embezzler," said Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, the author, of Mrs. J. V. Nash of London, whose husband has just been granted a divorce.

Mrs. Nash's ambition was to become "the best-dressed woman" in London, her husband declared. The judge, in granting the decree, scored Mrs. Nash for her extravagance, declaring women who lived only for vanity's sake to be a menace.

But the unkindest cut of all was contained in a London society editor's column, which said: "The pity of it is that Mrs. Nash aspired to be known as the 'best-dressed woman in London' and that London society did not even know she existed."

WANTED—A LITTLE RECIPROCITY By MORRIS.

COUNTERFEITERS TAKE MILLIONS

Most Gigantic Plot in History of Country Is Broken Up.

MEN "HIGHER UP" ARE CAUGHT

Business Organized Along Modern Lines, With Many "Salesmen"—Widespread Circulation Due Partly to Its Use to Buy Liquor and Drugs From Bootleggers and Smugglers—Trail of Spurious Bills Leads as Far Away as Egypt.

The most gigantic counterfeiting plot in the history of the country has been broken up by the arrest in New York city and other large centers of nearly 100 counterfeiting chiefs, as well as the arrest of hundreds of agents of the fake money ring. Between $1,000,000 and $10,000,000 in spurious money was dumped into the trading marts of a score of nations before the arrests, however. Bogus money has been reported from as far away as Egypt, according to reports to Joseph A. Palma, chief of the United States secret service squad, which has been investigating the situation for the last eight months.

The widespread circulation of the counterfeit was due partly to its use by counterfeiters to buy liquor and drugs from bootleggers and smugglers of narcotics, and partly to its passage by a band of men and women who toured the country in automobiles, getting rid of considerable sums of the bogus money in every city they visited.

Ringleaders Are Caught.

The secret service operatives are confident that the ringleaders are now in custody, and that nearly 1,000 members of the gang who actually passed the money, or acted as agents and lookouts, will soon be caught. More than 600 arrests already have been made. The ring was developed along business lines, with retailers and wholesalers, and then the manufacturers. Each section worked separately, and the makers of the bogus money never met the retailers, all transactions being made by liaison officers.

Mr. Palma said that he did not believe the counterfeiting gang had any direct connection with either the bootleggers or the drug smugglers, but thought that the latter were victimized by the counterfeiters. Both the bootleggers and drug smugglers, he explained, are lawbreakers, and the counterfeiters found it easy and considered it safe to buy liquor and drugs with the "phoney" money, relying upon the fact that the victims were also violators of the law to prevent them from making complaint. Newly-arrived immigrants were also easy victims for the passers of the counterfeit money.

The places in New York city raided by the operatives contained immense loot according to Mr. Palma. They were stocked with bundles containing hundreds of thousands of dollars of spurious money, thousands of dollars, worth of postage-stamps, fake whisky labels, revenue stamps, bogus coins, and memoranda. Engraving boards, presses, moulds and dies were also taken.

The main office of the counterfeiters was found to be in an Italian restaurant in New York's famous Greenwich village. Nine branch offices were discovered in Brooklyn, New Jersey, Long Island, and other nearby places. These places were guarded by an elaborate system of guards and lookouts and it was only after months of patient work that the government agents were able to penetrate the lines and arrest the men said to be "higher up."

Sold in Wholesale Lots.

Secret service agents, who posed as criminals during the long investigation of the plot, found that the largest distributors sold the counterfeit notes for 17 cents on the dollar in "wholesale" lots, while the smaller distributors disposed of them at 50 cents on the dollar in "retail quantities. The agents said that when they bought the spurious money for 17 cents on the dollar they knew they were hot on the trail.

Bogus gold coins, together with the equipment for making them, were also seized by the federal agents. The counterfeiters are believed to have turned to the manufacture of spurious gold coins after the bootleggers, already "stung" by faked paper money, began demanding specie for their illicit wares.

Two Children Arrested.

The investigation began with the arrest in Detroit, Mich., of two children, Zigmund, fourteen years old, and Freda Rosal, eight, who passed a spurious note. Their father and mother, now serving sentences, were placed under arrest, and through them the first faint clews leading to the nation-wide plot were discovered.

Mr. Palma, then working in Detroit, was told to select his own secret service operatives and run down the counterfeiters, regardless of the amount of time or money needed. Then began the long chase after the lawbreakers. Many times the agents could have arrested as many as ten of the passers of the bogus money, but to have done so would have warned those higher up and aided them to escape.

Led to Many Cities.

The trail of the counterfeiters led to many cities, but always the "shovers of the queer" kept ahead of the agents, so far as the chief counterfeiters were concerned. The net drew tighter and tighter, however, until at last the word was given to "go over the top," and within a few hours the ringleaders were arrested, the manufacturing plants of the counterfeiters raided, and the greatest plot of its kind in the country was definitely smashed, according to the federal authorities.

During the last few months there have been scores of counterfeiters arrested in many European cities, and in almost every case their trail led directly back to the American organization. Bermuda has been flooded recently with bogus money, due, it is said, to the big whisky trade centered there.

Foreign Coinage "Faked."

Because of the international ramifications of the scheme, police action may be taken in foreign countries, especially Italy and Austria. Among the effects of the prisoners were found many counterfeit lire and Austrian kronen, possibly designed for shipment abroad, according to the government agents. The Canadian authorities have also been informed of the discovery of counterfeit Quebec liquor commission stamps.

Mr. Palma has issued a warning that any person caught passing any of the counterfeit money will be arrested and held as an accessory. Most of the spurious bills are the Federal Reserve Bank $2 notes, the $5 "Indian head" silver certificates, $10 national bank notes of the National bank of Ozone Park, L. I., and $20 national bank notes of the National City bank of Grand Rapids, Mich.

ROMANCE IN ARTIST'S LIFE

Friendship Between Chopin and George Sand That Had Ending in Lovers' Quarrel.

In 1836 Chopin, the famous composer, whose appearance was "one of the most mysterious and poetic in the history of music"—was introduced to the novelist George Sand. She was a theorist and romantic writer who rode horseback astride, at times wore trousers, and even smoked cigars, which used to disgust Chopin to the bottom of his soul. She was not accounted an exceptionally beautiful woman, but she had an arresting personality and almost masculine assertiveness.

"Chopin was fascinated," says Olin Downes, in his "The Lure of Music." "There were times when he turned away in despair; but back he came. In the summer of 1838 he was ill, and George Sand, who was going with her family to the island of Majorca, induced Chopin to accompany them." While there the weather became unusually cold for the island. "It was Chopin who shivered and complained, and George Sand and her son who built the fires, which smoked. In this place he wrote some of his most dramatic and imaginative compositions."

The friendship of Chopin and George Sand ended in a lovers' quarrel in 1844, and they were bitter enemies to the time of his death in 1849. She "wrote up" Chopin as the Prince Karol in her novel, "Lucrezia Floriana."

SMART PIECE OF ADVERTISING

Excursions Inaugurated by St. Paul Real Estate Man Got Result He Had Hoped For.

One of the most daring schemes in real estate advertising, and perhaps the first, in the United States, was the series of December excursions on the Mississippi between 1865 and 1870, conducted by Col. Girard Hewit of St. Paul. Colonel Hewit opened a real estate office in St Paul in 1856. Business did not go well. Immigrants from the old countries heard of the "hyperborean climate" of Minnesota and preferred to stay away from it.

In December, 1865, shortly before Christmas, Colonel Hewit organized a steamship excursion on the Mississippi. Guests were invited with the understanding that every one was to wear a linen "duster" and be equipped with a fan. A section of the Mississippi that was not covered with ice was chosen for the excursion and a spot not far from St. Paul as the picnic ground.

On the appointed day the guests arrived, all protected with heavy woolen sweaters and fur coats underneath the linen dusters, and each armed with a fan in his gloved hands.

Colonel Hewit's trick worked. News of the St. Paul excursion was spread far and wide throughout the East. Colonel Hewit's December excursions on the Mississippi were kept up till 1870, the year of his death.

DOG DIES; BOY SHOOTS SELF

Lad May Be Crippled for Life as Result of Act Done in Grief.

Grief-stricken by the death of his pet, a Boston terrier, nine-year-old Charles Weber of South Bend, Ind., shot himself with his father's revolver. Physicians say he may be crippled for life as a result.

While the family was at dinner the lad took his father's pistol and shot himself through the thigh. Hearing the shot, the parents ran to the boy's room and found him crumpled on the floor, with a small picture of his dog clenched in his hand.

Arizona Desert.

A vast stretch of clean-swept sand to distant mountains; sand not solely gray, but garnet red and rich black brown. Stately columns of cactus—twenty, thirty, forty feet high—softly green with a faint pink bloom. Curving, fingerlike cactus with crimson blossoms, like gorgeous jewels, at the tips of graceful stems. Shorter cactus, a fluff of white. Close to the ground, little cactus heads, delicately pinkish green. Sage bush, gray-green in leaf, gold in blossom. Palo verde trees, a tangle of slender green stems. Everywhere graceful mesquite bushes like rich dark evergreens. Over all, a turquoise sky. Flooding all sunshine like molten gold. Far away, purple, rose, amethyst and lavender of silent hills.

That is the desert—a silent, shimmering land of exquisite color; a vast soundless place of peace.

Half of Fatal Accidents On Railroads Preventable

Forty-one out of every hundred fatal injuries to employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad System in the last five years have been due to being struck by engines, cars or trains. A high percentage occurs among new men, particularly those with less than six months' experience. Accidents of this kind are almost entirely preventable, if the danger is realized and proper precautions are observed.

These facts are brought out in an analysis just completed by the company's insurance department, as part of its work of studying the causes of accidents and means of their prevention. A careful examination of several hundred actual cases has resulted in the framing of the following 10 rules for employes, to avoid being struck by engines, cars or trains while at work:

Keep off the railroad track if work does not make it necessary to be there.

Walk between the tracks and not between the rails of tracks when work permits.

When necessary to walk between the rails on multiple tracks, walk against the current of traffic and remember that trains may run in either direction on any track at any time.

Before crossing tracks look in both directions and listen.

On approach of trains, clear tracks promptly and to a safe position.

When working in gangs men should clear tracks together as far as practicable.

When getting off trains watch out for trains moving on adjacent track.

When inspecting engines, cars or trains avoid getting too close to adjacent track on which trains may be moving.

When getting out of the way of one train be cautious to avoid getting in the path of another train.

During fog, rain and snow and when there is unusual noise, use extreme caution—move cautiously.

Copies of the insurance department's report have been forwarded to officers of all divisions and shops to form the basis of a general campaign for the prevention of accidents due to being struck by engines, cars or trains.

Home-made Remedy Stops Coughs Quickly

The best cough medicine you ever used. A family supply easily and quickly made. Saves about $2.

You might be surprised to know that the best thing you can use for a severe cough, is a remedy which is easily prepared at home in just a few moments. It's cheap, but for prompt results it beats anything else you ever tried. Usually stops the ordinary cough or chest cold in 24 hours. Tastes pleasant, too—children like it—and it is pure and good.

Your 2½ ounces of Pinex in a pint bottle; then fill it up with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desired. Thus you make a full pint—a family supply—but costing no more than a small bottle of ready-made cough syrup.

And as a cough medicine, there is really nothing better to be had at any price. It goes right to the spot and gives quick, lasting relief. It promptly heals the inflamed membranes that line the throat and air passages, stops the annoying throat tickle, loosens the phlegm, and soon your cough stops entirely. Splendid for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, famous for its healing effect on the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

The Home Garden

The Fault of Overcrowding

Overcrowding, perhaps, is the greatest fault of the average gardener. Because the plants are small when they first appeared above ground, he will not space them properly, because they look lonesome with an expanse of bare soil between them. However, they will grow fast, and at maturity will use all the space allowed them, and usually are growing into and over each other.

This fault should be corrected when the transplanting is done, or if the seeds are sown in the open ground, by judicious thinning. Follow directions, which are always contained on seed packets as to proper distances, to the letter. Work with a tape measure or yardstick. The crop of many vegetables will be in proportion to the chance they have to develop. The bush lima bean is an excellent object lesson. Many gardeners have given up the bush lima bean as not being productive enough to justify its space. But give the individual beans 18 inches apart, so they will have a chance, and there will be a bountiful crop with ordinarily good soil and moisture conditions.

The rule to follow in transplanting seedlings is to move them as soon as the leaves touch. The first transplanting should be done when the first pair of true leaves appear. If they are not placed at sufficient distance, and often it is not convenient to do so at this time, because of lack of space indoors or in the hotbed, be prepared to move them when the developing leaves touch. If you do not, they will begin to spindle in the struggle to reach the sunlight.

The percentage of loss is greater as the plants attain size, but early transplanting go a long way to alleviate this loss by developing strong, fibrous root systems, especially in the case of plants which, undisturbed, form tap roots, or a long root that goes straight down some distance before giving off branches. When this long root has developed far the plant receives a severe check in being transplanted, from which it takes a long time to recover.

Easter Splendid Festival in the Early Centuries

Easter Sunday! What a picture the words suggest! A beautiful, sunny day, church-going and the display of the new spring suit on the boulevard in the afternoon. A day much like any other Sunday, for in these prosaic times Easter is not the brilliant, joyous festival it once was.

Suppose we were to turn back the pages of history to the Middle ages. What a festival Easter was in those days! The old pagan Anglo-Saxon festival of Easter was not merely a remembrance and its strange mummery not forgotten. Everything was light-hearted and colorful and vibrant. Even those who had to wear the long faces during the rest of the year forgot their seriousness to play and dance and perform strange tricks upon one another in the streets.

The priests, along with the laymen, imbibed the spirit of Easter and laughed and played with the care-free spirit of schoolboys. Instead of preaching serious sermons or exhorting the people to consider the wickedness of their ways, they told humorous stories of how the devil tried to keep the Spirit of Christ from ascending out of hell into Heaven. Their stories were very droll and made the people laugh exceedingly. Imagine a minister these days getting up before his congregation and telling funny stories Easter morning!

The people were very happy and greeted one another cheerfully upon the streets. "Christ is risen," they would say. "Yea, Christ is truly risen," would come the answer. Then the mummery and the leaping and capering and trick playing upon the streets: The modern French festival of the Lenten season, with its joyous abandon, more accurately resembles the Easter festivals of the Middle ages.

The Pascal Candle.

The great sight of the day was the Pascal candle burned in the principal church or cathedral in the city. How the people rushed and thronged through the streets to see it! Oftentimes the candles were huge affairs, rising as high as 75 feet in the air and weighing as much as 75 pounds. What was left of the candle at Whitsunday was made into candles for the poor.

The interiors of the churches were truly marvelous. Thousands of candles burned in every niche, flooding the place with a marvelous brilliance. Dazzling colors were everywhere. "Christ is risen. Let us be joyous," was the thought that was in the minds of everyone. Then, after the impressive chanting of the Easter hymns, would come the giving of the Easter kiss. Even the beggar and the outcast was not forgotten in this.

Easter at the beginning was a pagan celebration for the coming of spring. When the Christians came they took over most of the old observances, changing the significance to correspond with the new religion. So the old Paschal lamb of the Hebrews became the lamb of Christ. The casting of an effigy of winter into a fire that represented spring was changed into a symbolism of Judas and the fires of hell.

The lighting of the Easter fires on the sacred mountains was said to correspond to the pillar of fire that led the Hebrews out of the wilderness into the Promised Land.

Played Ball in Streets.

Many of the customs of observances, one time, had had religious meaning, but by the Middle ages this symbolism had been partly forgotten. They merely represented the spirit and joviality of the day. So there was the custom of playing ball in the streets. The ball represented the sun, which was popularly supposed to give three hops when rising Easter morning. This sport was engaged in by everyone, even by the priests, bishops, monks and mayors and corporations of cities.

Another popular custom that grew out of the egg symbol for Easter was egg chipping and egg rolling. Both of these games were to test the thickness of the shells. We still have a survival of this custom in the egg-rolling contest held annually for children on the White House grounds.

The word Easter itself means April and is the name of the Anglo-Saxon Goddess of Spring. At first it was celebrated with all the licentious mummery imaginable to a heathen religion, but as the centuries passed and the Christmas came, it became a purely religious festival. The meaning of the rites were lost, but the people observed them just the same. Surely none of us feel that we are performing a heathen rite when we give Easter eggs to our friends.

In the early days of the Christian religion no festivals were observed, not even Easter, "The whole of time is admitted unto Christians because of the excellency of the good things which have been given," explained St. Chrysostom.

Gradually, however, Easter became the biggest festival in the calendar of the church. Everyone who professed the religion of Christ was supposed to take communion on that day. If he refused his name was to be excommunicated and at death his body to be denied Christian burial.

How Date Was Fixed.

The dispute over the true time to hold Easter was one of the quarrels that shook the early Christian world. Those who had been Jewish wanted to celebrate it on the 14th of the old Jewish month of Nisanic—the beginning of the Jewish festival of the passover. Those who had been Gentiles said that Easter should be observed on the following Sunday.

For years this dispute waxed warmly, until it was finally settled by the great church council held at Nicea in 325. It was decreed that Easter should come on a Sunday and that the date should be the first Sunday following the full moon after the vernal equinox (March 21). The city of Alexandria, then famed for its skill in astronomical affairs, was given the duty of fixing the date.

It was a pagan custom to regard the egg and the rabbit as symbols of procreativeness. This is about the only Easter observance that has survived to modern times. Our custom of filling our homes with lilies and early flowers seems to be a custom of recent origin.

Dozens of Easter observances, no less picturesque, have been forgotten or overwhelmed in the seriousness of these latter days. So on Easter Monday husbands struck their wives, but on Tuesday the wives struck back. In Germany the men and maid servants observed the same custom, but used switches in doing so. It was, also, the custom for parents and children to try and surprise each other in bed early Easter morning. The tardy one would receive a rough switching to remind him or her of remissness.

Much Liberty Permitted.

In every way Easter day was a day of special privilege. In Russia everyone was wished was allowed to go into the churches and ring the bells as long as he desired. Thousands of people availed themselves of this opportunity. In England the men ran joyfully about the streets lifting the women from the ground three times. The one so favored had to give the male either a silver sixpence or a good hearty kiss. This custom was observed in some parts of the country almost down to the present day. In Puy in France, from time immemorial, the canons tried to catch one of their number sleeping Easter morning. After matins were sung in the chapel they rushed in a body to the room of the sleeping one and sprinkled him with water. If the canon was found asleep he was obliged to furnish his fellows with breakfast.

Easter Day Varied.

In ancient times Easter day fell on different dates in different climates, so cycles of years with dates fixed had to be drawn up. There was a dispute over the correctness of the cycles, and there was great confusion. Finally, however, Easter date was based on the Gergorian correction of the calendar, but that threw the Eastern church out of line. Consequently Easter has only once been celebrated universally by all Christians. This was in 1895, when all the reckonings fell on the same day.

One of the pious observances of the Middle ages that marked the closing of Lent and the opening of Easter time was the blessing of the foods which had been denied so long. Many were the tales of the eager ones who were struck down for eating of them before they had been blessed.

The Easter season has always been accepted as the time for receiving the young into the church. What a picture it makes!

SPOT IN SOUTH DAKOTA VIRGIN OF WHITE FEET

"Sichi Makoche," or Bad Place, Untrod by Paleface—Legendary to Sioux Indians.

Half a dozen miles southwest of Scenic, S. D., in the very heart of the Badlands, Big Foot Wall stretches away to the southwest and the northwest for miles. Between this wall and the pinnacles of Whitewater Wall, and bounded on the west by Sage Creek Wall, is an area of approximately four square miles. No white man's foot has ever rested there so far as can be learned.

The Indians call the plot "sichi makoche," meaning "bad place." A large scale map of Pennington county drawn in 1908 describes the place as "Badland bluffs and canyons impossible of survey."

Occasionally one of the Dakota (Sioux) Indians who will talk tells strange tales about this particularly rugged portion of South Dakota. Deep canyons and gorges lead up to spire-like pinnacles, and every attempt to follow their torturous paths thus far has ended in failure. Baffling cul-de-sacs greet the explorer at every path.

Chief Flaming Arrow, a veteran of the frontier days, gives what probably is the Sioux belief. Many years ago, the chief said, before the pale face came, there was the place where dwelt the Wankdinyan (Thunder Bird) high in the pinnacles of stone. This wall of rock kept out unwelcome visitors, the chief contended, and added that the protected area is rich in food, sunlight and warmth and has pure, cold streams of running water.

The old chief said that perhaps at some time some one may have found his way into the place, but if so he never returned.

FAMINE IN JAPAN FEARED

Weather Experts Foresee Partial Failure of Empire's Rice Crop.

The probability of a famine in northern Japan this year because of the abnormally heavy ice in Bering sea is foreseen by the United States weather bureau. This condition appears indirectly to control the food supply of Japan because of its bearing on rice production, the principal food crop.

Great rice failures, with resultant severe famine, have occurred when the summers have been unusually cool, because the crop is seldom grown successfully when the mean temperature during the four months of the active growing season is less than 75 degrees. Japanese meteorologists have discovered that the summer temperature in northern Japan depends largely on the temperature of an ocean current flowing southward from the Bering sea and neighboring waters, and this winter ice is unusually abundant in those waters.

Different Estimates of Pie.

A business man, forced to take many of his meals downtown and, as a result, inclined to be favorably impressed with his wife's cooking, invited two of his youngsters to take lunch with him at the chamber of commerce. This was a treat to the youngsters who were in the habit of eating at home all the time. When the pie was served the proud father said to the children: "This pie isn't anything like the kind that mother makes, is it?" And to the father's horror and the amusement of the others at the table one of the children replied "No, father, it's much better."—Indianapolis News.

Hudson's Bay Company.

The Hudson's Bay company, incorporated in 1670, connects, by uninterrupted lineage, the North American wilds of the moving picture set with the stern realities of an earlier day. The first records of this staunch example of British empire contain the following notation of a shipment made to the company's posts shortly after the earliest expedition to Canada in 1668:

Two hundred fowling pieces with powder and shot.
Two hundred copper kettles.
Twelve gross knives.
One thousand hatchets.

The copper kettles used today in these northernmost outposts of civilization are practically identical in design with those of two centuries or more ago.

NEW LONG COATS ON STYLE SHEET

Three-Quarter Outer Garment for Spring Wear Has No Flare; Full and Drapy.

ALL-OVER EMBROIDERY USED

Masses of Decoration Arranged in Captivating Manner—Interesting Fabrics in Limelight—Plain and Fur Collars Features.

A spring coat, it would seem from the displays in the shops, can be pretty much anything you choose to make it. The fact is, asserts a fashion writer in the New York Times, that the separate coat is an important factor in the present styles. No hard and fast rules have been set down for its design. You can suit your coat to your figure, your personality and your demands just as certainly as you can accomplish the same end with your frocks and gowns.

There was a time, and not so long ago, when a coat could not be placed in the circle of the beautiful. It was a heavy, cumbersome looking thing that was designed chiefly for use. One waited always for a sight of the costume underneath before expecting to be confronted with the least claim to beautiful design. Now the coat is a part of the costume, often first as drapy and graceful of line as any dress could be. The coat, indeed, is now considered almost a dress in itself, for the frock underneath its folds becomes a secondary consideration—something which is in the nature of a background.

Of course, this new development in connection with coats puts a new responsibility upon the well-dressed woman. She must, almost of necessity, have two or three sorts of coats to accompany her various types of clothes. Since there is so great an element of design about the outer wraps they at once take on a character which places them in this class or that. And when they are worn with frocks of any opposing character they lose all style and flare and become nothing at all. The problem then, of choosing a coat becomes a little intricate. But when you once realize how interesting the new game is, why, then you can't wait to begin your plans for your new coat expression.

The three-quarter coat is the newest. It is so new indeed that as yet scarcely any of them have been seen. Now, the three-quarter coat is straight of line. It has no flare whatsoever, no sign of a peplum, but its line descends quite simply to the knees or a little below that point.

On Linen Full and Drapy

Some of the three-quarter coats—they cannot be called jackets—are made on lines that are quite full and drapy. They take their little hint and inspiration from the jacquettes of the winter and tie at one side at a point that marks a decidedly low waistline. They start out by looking very much as a suit coat might that is, about the neck and sleeves. Then their surplice lines in front gather into a bunch at one side and are tied there with a rather wide bow of ribbon or of the coat's material. There is something decidedly picturesque about them. They get away from that hardness of outline which it is so hard for some women to accept and they manage prettily to subdue any unusual width about the hips, adding the flaring bow with its long ends at just the place where it will do all the good in the world as far as trimming is concerned. It helps, too, in avoiding the severity of line which does not seem to be at all a part of the season's style—at least for a coat of this type.

You will find these three-quarter coats making part of three-piece costumes, and just as often you will find them, in silk or soft knit or brocaded wools made to accompany the dresses of soft crepe and chiffon for when the dampness of the softer materials peep out beneath the coat for a space of ten to twelve inches has added just that much to the softness of the appearance of the costume and the effect is entirely in accordance with all of the dictates of the modern styles.

The newest coats of three-quarter length are made of lace or embroidery. They are so beautiful that they make the amateur stop to wonder how ever they have been done. The real truth about them is that they are made up of solid masses of embroidery—that is, the handsomest of them are—and they form so decorative a wrap arrangement that they are bound to capture the attention and the fidelity of any woman at all interested in the art of dress. Just as we had about decided that handwork and embroidery had left the land of dress, back it pops in a handsomer expression than it has ever achieved before this since the days of the India shawls. Of course there are all sorts of imitations of these embroidered fabrics, and very handsome ones they are, too. They are done by those clever machines which vie with human fingers, and you will find the materials sold by the yard looking so colorful and gorgeous that they almost demand you to stop and purchase them.

Embroidery Is Attractive.

Some of the embroidery for these newer coats is done upon a foundation of satin. Again it uses a soft broadcloth for its beginnings. And at another time you will find it appearing upon the surface of a thickly pressed crepe. In fact, there seems no limit to what may be accomplished with this new idea in the way of making the outer wrap one of the most decorative parts of the costume.

While many of the collars are plain, there are also to be seen an astonishing number of those which are made of fur. Short-haired furs are used preferably, and the collars are made straight and folded so that they form, whether they be open or closed, flattering frames for the faces that are posed against them.

The little jacquettes are by no means passe. Very many of them are to be seen in connection with the newer spring clothes and not a few of them are worn as extra coats. They can be tied about the hips, forming them into blouse effects or they can be allowed to hang straight, making cunning little box coats that are especially suitable for dressy sports wear. At Palm Beach any number of them have been made of the lighter pastel colorings and worn with white or gray or café au lait frocks. They are most interesting when done in this wise; and there is no doubt that women will find a great many uses for them as the spring season advances.

The little short coat makes it possible to change the appearance of one's costume without much trouble. One can have two or three of them in different colorings to wear with a certain dress or with a collection of dresses. It is not a difficult thing to make by one's self, for its cut is simple to accomplish and its making easy to achieve.

Don't imagine, from all this talk about shorter coats, that the long ones have disappeared. They are as prominent as ever and will be worn in large numbers only they are not so new and so startling as the ones which have taken on shorter lengths.

Artful Creations.

Long coats, indeed, give every evidence of being costumes all by themselves. They are redolent of much design and consistent making. Simple though they may seem, they are creations involving much art and labor. They are not to be considered lightly in any respect, for they are made up intricately and formed to show an astonishing amount of gracefulness and charm.

Along with the period styles and the great craze for 1880 frocks there has come a rage for a coat which involves these same principles. It is shaped and flounced. It is full and draped. It is wide of sleeve and drooping of line. In fact it has all of the picturesque charm which is characteristic of the dresses fashioned after the ideals of that period. It is a dignified looking affair and can only be worn where things are very dressy. Some of the sleeves start out from the shoulder to be tight, but when they reach a space below the elbows they usually turn into extraordinarily flared cuffs.

The materials of the longer coats are plainer than those which make up the shorter variety. They are satins and duvetines—anything that has that rich and sumptuous look about it—and they include the heavier varieties of satins.

The Padlocked Face.

Fixing the padlock to a human being's mouth was at one time the ecclesiastical punishment for blasphemy in Hungary. In Spain the same offense was punished by tearing out the culprit's tongue. In France the tongue of the blasphemer was branded, in Holland it was pierced by nails. In the museum at Budapest is the relic, taken from an ancient grave, of a padlocked human face. The staples are driven through the bones of the face at both sides of the mouth. A visit to some of the many dungeons of Europe and a study of the many instruments of torture once used upon the prisoners is a convincing proof of the cruelties of past ages.

Making Liars

A contributor says that woman is the creator of the liar:

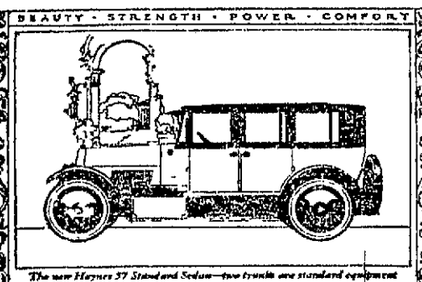

When she asks him if she is the only girl he ever loved.

When she asks him where he has been with whom, and doing what.

When she insists upon knowing what he did with that $5 10 he had last week.

When she inquires into any phase of his personal business.—Richmond Times Dispatch.

Representatives of the Beach Organization Tell the Truth

IN offering new securities of going concerns that have properly qualified themselves to use the services of the H. L. Beach Company, this organization has first taken pains to see that the investor is secured in two ways.

First, before offering any securities for an applicant, we consume weeks and weeks in investigating the principle of the company, in learning of its past history and its ability to pay worth-while dividends, in the character of its officers and their ability as efficient executives, and other points of vital interest to prospective investors.

Second, we employ no one to represent this organization who does not accurately describe the securities offered to the best of his ability. Each representative must have character; must place the reputation of our organization above his desire to make an immediate sale. Once in a long while we hear reports of a black sheep who passed our qualifying scrutiny and investigation and who exceeds the bounds of conservatism in his statements.

These men sever their connections with us immediately.

Occasionally we dispatch new representatives to parties in our confidence who report the claims and manner of approach made by the new man back to us. In this manner, we keep our representatives clean and reliable.

Representatives of the H. L. Beach Company are in the open; they have nothing to conceal. Feeling this way in their own hearts, they place our seasoned securities easily, which permits us to do this work for worthy corporations, deserving of the confidence of the public, at a margin often smaller than that paid for the underwriting of bonds for the largest corporations.

Pursuit

She ran as for life.

It was a sight for the gods, no doubt. In the still midnight, beneath the serene moon, in this lonely place, wildly and primitively beautiful, through the groves and among the crags sped the slim white-clad wife, dark hair flowing after; and hard behind, grunting and snorting, menacing, too, chased the heavy-built man, her husband. Different from the home life of the queen, indeed!

On the open path his clumsiness was equalized. She looked back, fearfully, over her shoulder; he was gaining on her, no doubt of that. Instantly she left the path, scrambling over the rough boulders which flanked it here, plunging into the copses. If such they were, bounding away through the virgin woods, sure-footed as a fawn. With a wild bursting of foliage and cracking of boughs, Horace leaped after her. On the difficult terrain her superior nimbleness gave her advantage; the distance between them steadily widened. Once she heard his hoarse voice panting, "Stop! I tell you, stop!" Now the strange thrill of the chase, the throbbing excitement of the quarry, set her blood afire. She thought, "Pursue, and love!" and, laughing frantically to herself, flew the faster. And then, as she sped across a sweet, open space, a glade no doubt, powdered with bright moonlight, she glanced back again, unwisely; alas, her foot caught in a trailing vine and she pitched to the sward. The misfortune, which wasn't rectified in a second, cost her her lead. Releasing herself, rising dizzily, she found the pursuer almost upon her—almost, but not quite. She just eluded his fingers, breathlessly dodging; she doubled and turned; and so, in a moment, suddenly, she found her feet set on the winding path again, and lo, just ahead, was the old landing, and beyond, open water.

She had forgotten the water; she welcomed the sight of it now. She was quite spent, and those resolute feet were close behind. Flying over the loose board, the harried wife dove cleanly into the haven of the lake.

That Horace would follow her in this maneuver had not occurred to her. He was an indifferent swimmer, and his sinus, as we know, was sensitive. Never having seen him angry before, however, she had no doubt underestimated the force of his rages. In fact, the conquering male did not hesitate an instant. His ponderous body flying put feet first, broke water hardly a second behind her own.

Unhappily for her, the lake was shallow here; a tall man could stand on the bottom, and Horace was tall. In fine, while she was still submerged, her foot was roughly seized; coming up, spluttering, she found herself affectually prisoned.

Thus the man, like Neptune with a mermaid, had his way. The stars looked down upon the odd conjugal carose. Upon the woman's lips, gasping and watery, the lips of Horace, just as gasping, came waterily down. Though her heart hammered with a wild excitement, there was now no strength in her. After an instant, her feeble struggles ceased; another instant and, marvelously, resistance seemed no longer of any importance. Under this masterful embrace the wife's will, her whole being, indeed, seemed all at once, mysteriously, to dissolve within her.

"You witch! I will adore you forever," panted Horace wetly.

And then her bare dripping arms, lifting, went round his neck.

Under the impulse of his great love the days and the weeks that followed became for the wedded pair like a new and richer honeymoon. Her elusiveness faded; her reticence and reserves, all the provocative withdrawals, learned after how much tribulation, came to seem not only superfluous, but altogether unworthy. Since Horace gave so lavishly, how inconceivably mean-spirited to dole back to him with a thrifty and calculating hand!

Willingly, young Laurel let herself go.

The new banns brought their unexperienced blessing. Now God was ready, in the old phrase, to smile upon this union. There came another June and then another, and Laurel's first child was six months old.

Otherwise perhaps it would hardly have been bearable.

She sat in her room near the screened open window, nursing her boy, whom she had no thought of weaning as yet. The sultry afternoon was quiet. From the piazza below floated up the voice of her husband idly exchanging domestic news with his adoring mother, arrived the day before for her yearly visit; but she did not need that sound to make her remember his nearness. On the stand beside her lay a note from Howard Witheredge, who had lately "come into her life" again; she had just been thinking that nothing could be more symbolical than that.

Her name came vaguely wafting up to her.

"Laurel's stoutened," said her mother-in-law, rocking comfortably, though with a touch of asthma. "It's not unbecoming to her. I think she has—settled—somehow, Horace? She has gained in poise?"

"Yes, she's matured very much since the baby came," said Horace, and yawned a little.

"She is charming still. And a more exemplary and devoted wife I never saw. That pleases me so much. Do you know, my son," continued Mrs. Seymour, suddenly, "two years ago when I were here—that spring—I was rather afraid she was drifting away from you—just a little?"

"Really! What an idea! . . . No, I remember that summer on the lake particularly," said Horace thoughtfully. "We had a wonderful time."

"Oh, it's evident enough that I was mistaken!" said his mother archly. "She absolutely worships you, that's as clear as noonday."

"Oh, yes," said Horace.

There was a little silence. Down in the pasture-lot, behind the barn, the buxom new dairy maid was climbing over the stile. The lass had a trim leg. Having adjusted his glasses a little, Horace satisfied himself on that point.

"In fact, if the dear creature has a fault at all," he finished indolently, "I'd say that she loves me a little too well."

WENT AFTER THE MERRIMAC

Commodore Vanderbilt Eager to Engage the Dreaded Confederate Weapon of Warfare.

When the Confederate ram, Merrimac, burst out of its hiding place and made such fearful havoc among the federal frigates in Hampton roads during the Civil war, great consternation was caused in the nation's capital. Ericsson's little Monitor, arriving at Fortress Monroe in the nick of time, had driven the monster into his cave, but it was feared he would emerge again presently and continue the devastation. Through Thurlow Weed, Cornelius Vanderbilt, founder of the Vanderbilt millions and known to New Yorkers as "the Commodore," made President Lincoln an offer to stop the ram and keep it away with one of his own ships, stipulating, however, that he would accept no money for his services and that he was to be free from bossing of the Navy department. It was further stipulated that he was to have command with a crew to be furnished by the government. In 36 hours he was steaming into the mouth of the James river. The commodore was then sixty-seven years old, and his ship was his namesake, the Vanderbilt. Vanderbilt promised that if the Merrimac reappeared he would "run her down as a hound runs down a wolf, strike her amidships and sink her." The Merrimac did not reappear.

After the immediate danger was over the commodore returned home, but he generously agreed to allow his ship to remain in the service until the war was over.—Detroit News.

LAUDING THE HUMBLE PICKLE

Long Unsung, It Has at Last Come Into Its Own as a Personal Beautifier.

The lowly pickle has come into its own. It has at last been recognized as a beautifier. Little difference does it make that the person who recognized it happens to be president of the Pickle Packers' association; the important thing is that it is discovered. More than that, it is claimed by the same gentleman that it was constant nibbling of this cucumberish delicacy that gave Catherine of Aragon the beauty that won the heart of Henry VIII.

As was to be expected, traducers have already risen to ask why the pickles failed to keep her beautiful enough to retain Henry's love. This is, perhaps, a natural question. When Henry put Catherine away he did it in a most gentle manner, just as do our modern persons who take a trip to Reno or Paris when the love fire grows cold. Her non-pickle-eating successor, Anne Boleyn, was treated with no such consideration when her brief day ended. It consequently appears that the very objection raised to an argument for the pickle as a beautifier indicates that it may be not only that but a life-saver as well.—Springfield Union.

SHOWS HIMSELF TO FAITHFUL

Tradition of Rising of Martyred Priests' Coffin Has Strong Hold in New Mexico.

To the Church of St. Augustine at Isleta, N. M., there attaches a queer legend. It is the tradition of the rising of Padre Padilla's coffin. Among the Franciscan friars who accompanied Coronado on his famous march to what he called Quivira—country of the Wichita Indians to Kansas—was Padre Juan de Padilla. This intrepid servant of God (when Coronado turned homeward), remained with a view of christianizing these Indians. He was killed by them, and now tradition has it that somehow in the heavenly ordering, the body of the martyred padre got miraculously transferred from Kansas to a place under the church altar at Isleta, and that periodically the coffin, which was a section of a hollow cottonwood trunk, rises plainly to view in the church, disclosing to whomsoever may be present, the padre, rather mummified, but still in his black whiskers.

Fine for the Bath.

The efficacy of common salt as a gargle for the throat, a dry shampoo for the hair or for a five-minute morning rub, is a well-recognized fact. A towel, especially prepared for the latter use, however, gives a sense of well being that little else can equal. To prepare it, dissolve one cupful of either table or sea salt (preferably sea salt) in a quart of hot water. When cool immerse a large Turkish towel, allowing it to remain for 15 or 20 minutes or until the salt is all absorbed. Hang it up and let it drip dry, without wringing. On arising in the morning rub the body vigorously with the dry salted towel. It will give a wonderfully stimulated, invigorated feeling.

Revival of Wood Engraving.

The art of wood engraving is very old. When it was rare to find a prince who could write, little woodcuts for attesting documents were in use in Europe. But before that the Chinese had invented the art. In modern times the woodcut has been submerged beneath other methods of reproducing drawings and photographs, but the art is now being kept delightfully alive by the Society of Wood Engravers of London.

The Mental Hazard

SOMETHING ABOUT CLARENCE BUDINGTON KELLAND

I asked for Mr. Kelland at the First National bank in the town where he lives on Long Island. I was directed to ascend the stairs at the left. I did, and came out at the top right on Mr. Kelland himself. There wasn't anything up there but Mr. Kelland and Mr. Kelland's desk, a typewriter, much paper, and the other chair in which I sat. We were completely surrounded by room.

It was easy to talk to Mr. Kelland; he was interested at once in the Star Author Series of Matrimonial Adventures, but I could get him to say very little about himself.

Finally I elicited the following facts: He started writing by work on a newspaper because he "wanted to get three square meals a day." He had been on the staff of the Detroit News for several years. Then he edited the American Boy. He comes originally from Michigan, but he has lived in Vermont and Maine, and has owned lumber camps in both states. At one time he and his brother owned and ran a mill for the manufacture of clothespins.

He knows the Northwest and the Maine woods; the business of big industrials; and he knows everyday people, too, the way they think and feel and love. His attitude is big and human and typically American.

His first story to bring him into prominence was "Sudden Jim." Since then, his has been a name to conjure with.

"The Mental Hazard," written purposely for this series, shows the infinite fineness of his treatment of the marriage theme. It is a big story.

MARY STEWART CUTTING, JR.

"I'm beginning to think," said McDonald Kent to his wife, "that marriage is like golf—full of mental hazards."

"I presume," said Jane icily, "that you're trying to say something disagreeable."

"I'm trying to be pleasant, I'm trying to get dressed and out of this room without a row." His voice gradually lifted with his irritation. "Thus," he finished, "setting a world's record."

Jane turned to look out of the window, and then she began to hum. The sound of her humming bored into her husband's ears maddeningly. He was a reasonable human being; he knew nothing had been done or said which warranted either of them in giving away to anger and the usual morning quarrel, but he could feel it coming on. There was an inevitability about those morning rows, a silly inevitability. Morning after morning he had arisen with good resolutions, and so, he knew, had his wife—but the result was always the same.

"Mental hazard," he told himself. "Like driving a golf ball over the pond on the sixth hole. You know you're going to smash it into the water, and you do." He turned to Jane with elaborate self-repression and painstaking patience.

"I don't want to be disagreeable, God knows," he said. "I don't want to start the day with a rumpus, but—"

"But you always do," she said provocatively.

He compressed his lips and stared at her, determined to control his tongue. "Honestly, Jane," he said, "I wasn't trying to say anything disagreeable—that about mental hazards. What I meant was that you can't play golf without believing you can make your shots—and that's just like marriage. We're off our game. We're always topping our irons or hitting out of bounds. Purely mental. We could play the game as well as we did six or seven years ago if we just thought so."

"I hadn't lived with you ten years seven years ago," Jane said with finality.

"God send you're not living with me ten years hence," he said, his anger suddenly ablaze.

"I wouldn't be living with you tomorrow," she answered, "if there was any way out. Oh, why haven't I money of my own? Why can't I be independent of you?"

"Well," he said shortly, "you haven't and you can't—and there are the kids, so all we can do is make the best of it."

With that he jerked on his coat and flung out of the room to eat a breakfast which had become flavorless for him as it had for his wife. Words, words, words. He knew, as she knew that what had passed between them was really meaningless, was nothing but sound and irritation. Both knew that, for the most part, they lived amicably, comfortably—and sincerely wanted to live together in peace and enjoyment. Then why? Why those quarrels so easily lighted? Why this exasperation with each other, this shortness of patience, this painstaking search for a cause of affront? McDonald could find no answer to his questions.

Their marriage had stretched over 11 years, and there were two children, nine and seven years old. Neither McDonald or his wife gave consideration to the fact that the ages of their children might have much to do with the steadily increasing inclemency of their life together. The fact of the matter was that the children had passed babyhood in safety. They were in school; no longer were they monopolizing the attention of their parents, and, consequently, after all these years, Jane and McDonald had time to think about themselves.

Jane was not the sort of person to think and analyze, but she felt. Her emotions were headstrong and she was undiplomatically frank in describing them. She knew that some essential element had gone out of their marriage, some element she craved. With something of fear she realized that she did not love McDonald. The urge which had swept her into marriage with him, and made their first years together very sweet and wonderful, had vanished. This discovery was followed by a period of active revolt. She worked herself into a state of mind in which she believed her husband had become actually repulsive to her, and, in her headstrong way, she told him in a storm of tears.

McDonald stood aghast. That such a thing could have happened to him was unbelievable. It was incredible until he sorted over his own feelings toward his wife and found that he had reached a state of indifference toward her. The glow was gone forever.

They had reached a point which every married couple must reach—the moment of readjustment when they must rebuild upon a new foundation or see their structure swept away by the rising storm. They seemed unable to locate a stable foundation upon which to lay a new cornerstone.

McDonald considered the practical side of the question. The thing, he told himself, was a fact. Apparently it could not be mended, so there was nothing to do but try to make the best of it. The children made any other course impossible, and finances made this course necessary. It was all he could do to support one establishment in comfort, therefore, even had he been willing to do so, he could not have allowed Jane to leave him as she seemed to wish to do. He had not the money to allow her to live separately in independent dependence.

Jane's reactions, however, were purely emotional. She no longer loved McDonald, and to love seemed to her the one essential to life—to love and to be loved. She awoke bitterly to the realization that the love which she loved had not been present in their home for years. She craved the uplift of love, remembering how she had been borne along blindly upon a warm rushing wave of love during the first years of her married life. She wanted that again, wanted it to continue. The idea of the commonplace was abhorrent to her; the thought of continuing to live with McDonald as his wife was repulsive. She was young, vivid, lovelier even than she had been ten years ago, and she felt somehow that her loveliness and her life were going to waste; that she was being cruelly, bitterly cheated.

Which, if you stop to think of it, is a dangerously fertile state of mind.

The first sharpness of realization became somewhat dulled. Life continued. The household remained intact, but always it perched upon the brink of disaster. Everything was commonplace, habit, humdrum. It was maddening, wearing, a constant source of irritation. Bickerings were inevitable.

McDonald settled down grimly to the task of holding his family together, of holding his wife. He was essentially fair-minded. He perceived, regretted, and tried to make the best of it—but it was not easy. A certain tautness of disposition added to the difficulties. As for Jane, she went along thinking of herself, holding herself more or less in suspense, craving, always craving for the return of that which had vanished forever.

Jane had always done much as she pleased, and McDonald had interfered little with her whims and amusements. She had her friends, both men and women, but, John saw with alarm, her men friends were narrowing down to one. She golfed with John Firth. McDonald was logical enough to realize the danger of it, but also he had the self-rebellious strain which drove her, sometimes against her own will, to do those things which she was extremely forbidden to do, or to accomplish that from which authority sought to restrain her. McDonald knew his interference would only make a bad matter worse.

He was more or less of a fatalist, too. "If she's any good, he said to himself, "she'll stick. If not, she'll go." And there he rested, hoping for the best.

These things happened in those unpleasant days of 1920 when business was ill with that epidemic which decimated the financial population, as the "flu" had decimated the human population of the country, and now, when McDonald's mind and heart were full of the danger which threatened his home, his business took sick of it, and lay at the point of death. He dealt in silks, and everybody knows what happened to silk in that unhappy year.

For weeks at a time his presence was required in the city day and night. For weeks at a stretch he carried his load of worry into his home after midnight, there to lie tossing, brain vexed almost to madness, unable to sleep. It was during these weeks of what Jane was pleased to call neglect, that her incipient affair with John Firth began to assume clear outlines. He was bringing into her life again that thing she craved—romance, the eagerness of those first days of her marriage. He loved her. Vehemently he told her of his love, and she delighted in the stirring of it—and then as must happen, being in love with love, she imagined herself in love with Firth. Which is exactly as bad as the real thing. Or perhaps it is the same thing. And, too, there was the element of adventure, secrecy, apprehension. Love flowers best in such conditions. Here lies the chief defect of marriage—ease of access to the loved one. There are no difficulties, no obstacles. If some method could be invented whereby a husband would treat risk in seeing his wife, or the wife have to plan and evade and dine in order to see her husband, divorce would disappear from the earth.

For weeks now Jane had been holding Firth at arm's length, reluctantly and more reluctantly, with difficulty and with greater difficulty. She was happy again, clandestinely happy, thrilled, poised on the brink of the precipice.

On a Friday night McDonald took an earlier train than usual, arriving at his home shortly after ten o'clock. He was at the end of his rope. The worst had happened. He was smashed, beaten down, obliterated. As he alighted from the train he was just where he had started fifteen years ago—no, he was in a worse case than he had been then. Fifteen years ago he had dared to embark in business for himself. He had possessed youth and hope, and about his neck was no millstone of responsibility. He could make or break and no damage done to any but himself. It was different tonight. When his creditors finished with him he would not have two nickels to jingle together. Even the house toward which he walked so slowly and heavily—that would be gone. He dreaded the ordeal of breaking the news to Jane.

Usually he rode home in a jitney—tonight he walked, walked to save the quarter it would have cost to ride. He took the short cut through a vacant lot to his back door. The soft lawn deadened his footsteps as he rounded the house to the low porch, and he arrived unheard. So lost was he in his apprehension of the coming interview with his wife that he was unconscious of his surroundings until he stood at the corner of the porch. Then the sound of a man's voice arrested him. He paused, not intending to spy, and the man's words came to his ears, vehement words, impassioned words. . . . John Firth was making love to his wife.

McDonald hesitated. He did not think clearly; was incapable of sharp decision.

"You must love me," he heard Firth say. "You must. You must. . . . I can't get along without you, Jane . . . Jane . . ." There was a brief silence. "Tell me you love me. Say you'll go away with me. . . . Nobody, nothing has the right to keep us apart if we love. It's a sin to keep us apart."

"I—oh, let me think, let me think," said Jane.

"Think! You've had time for thinking. Weeks and months of it. You must know. You do know. . . . Oh, Jane, nobody ever loved you as I do."

"It's sweet to be loved," said Jane. "But—oh, a woman has so much to think of."

"Just think of you and me—of the happiness we have a right to have. . . . Tell me, Jane, tell me you love me."

"Not now, John," McDonald heard his wife say, "not tonight. Let me have just this night to think. Tomorrow I'll—I'll tell you—how it is to be."

"You'll tell me you love me? You'll tell me you will go away with me?"

Jane paused, while McDonald waited dumbly, unable to speak, unable to move. "I—I hope so," she said, softly.

McDonald turned slowly. Stealthily he walked away. He did not want to be seen or heard. He wanted to get away and to face this new disaster, to stare into its eyes and to demand its meaning. He tramped. Hour after hour he tramped, his head seething with incoherent thoughts. So he had lost everything, business, wife, home—all in one debacle! He tried to realize it, to peer ahead and to picture his future. He could not. He groped for some plan to follow, for some action to take—but there was no light to follow, only the mark of bewilderment. One thing he knew, one fact stood out. He did not want to lose his wife and his home. Perhaps his wife might be a better wife and his home a happier home—but they were his and he wanted them. The thought of losing what lay yonder was intolerable to him.

There were savage thoughts, too; violent thoughts, but he fought them down. Somehow he did not blame Firth, and he could not blame his wife. Circumstances, cursed circumstances, were at fault. It was just the way things had happened. . . . And then, as dawn broke over the eastern tree tops, fatalism came to his succor.

"I'm at my blackest hour," he said to himself. "I'm broke. . . . If she's any good she'll stick by me. If she leaves me at a time like this she's better gone."

So, once again, he turned his footsteps toward his home. The house was still as he admitted himself and mounted the stairs to the room which was his wife's and his own. He opened the door. Jane heard the sound of it closing, and sat up, startled.

"Oh, McDonald," she said, and then she sat more erect and stared at him, at his gloomy, despairing eyes, at his weary, haggard face. "What time is it?" she asked.

"Nearly five."

"What—what is the matter, McDonald? Where have you been all night?"

"Walking," he said; "walking."

"Walking!" Alarm was in her voice. "What has happened? What's the matter?"

He paused. Which calamity should he announce first? Something, not reason, told him there was but one calamity to announce. About his discovery of last night he would be silent. He could not bring himself to speak of it, and in that moment he knew that, whatever came, whatever should be the outcome, he could never tell her what he had overheard. It must be buried, buried in his heart, never to be exhumed.

"I'm broke!" he said baldly.

"Broke! What do you mean?"

"I mean," he said, patiently, "that the business has gone up the spout. I've lost everything. Even this house has gone. We'll have to get out of it. . . . I haven't a cent in the world. It's—the end."

She stared at him wide-eyed, and, strangely enough, the thought that filled her mind was not of the money lost, of comforts departed, of possible poverty to come—it was of McDonald's loss—that the thing he had labored so hard to build was destroyed. Her heart cried out with sympathy for him!

"You poor boy. . . . Everything you've worked so hard for?"

"Everything," he said dully. "Through."

She got out of bed and walked to his side. "It's wicked, cruel," she said.

He shrugged his shoulders. "You've been wanting to—to get away from me," he said in a low voice. "There's no reason why you shouldn't now. . . . no reason why you shouldn't do it now. . . . You'll be as well off away from me as with me."

"I tell you everything's gone. This house—everything! You can't keep a servant. God knows where I'll get money for food." He turned away. "There's no use prolonging this. Somehow I'll fix things up for you to stay here until—you're ready to go."

She clutched his arm. "McDonald, what do you mean? Do you want to get rid of me?"

He looked down into her eyes. "No," he said.

"And you think I'd—desert you—when you're down and out? You think I'm that kind of a quitter?"

"You've wanted to get away. You're—been so tired of me."

"Poor boy," she said softly. "Poor boy. . . . I—Oh, McDonald, can't you see I couldn't go now? If you were rich—if everything was all right with you—" she hesitated. "But not now, not when—when you need me. Sit down, here." She drew him upon the bed beside her. "I may be a rotten friend," she said, "but I'm no quitter. We'll start again. Maybe it's all been planned this way. Maybe it didn't just happen. We'll start fresh. I'm not afraid. You—you can find a job—or get a start somehow, and I'll work. Oh, Mac, Mac, don't you want me to help you—back?"

"You don't love me," he said.

She looked into his eyes a full minute before replying, and then she said: "No, McDonald. . . not the way you mean, dear, it's better than the other kind of love—more lasting more to depend on. Don't make me go. Don't make me go. Let me stay and start all over again, not from the beginning but from a new beginning."

She stood before him and held out her hand. It is significant she did not offer her lips—but something told both of them that would be playing off the key. She extended her hand, and he took it in his hand and clung to it suddenly she burst into tears.

"Thank God you—you—busted," she said tremulously.

RECOVERED MORE THAN DIME

Andrew Carnegie Stooped for Small Coin, and Had One More Proof of His Being Lucky.

Sometimes even the trivial side of a great man appeals to the public, writes Roscoe G. Mitchell in The New York Business. There is one experience I had with Mr. Carnegie. I had a copy of a cable from Berlin relative to some move made by the then Emperor William looking to the promotion of world peace. My city editor had asked that I get Mr. Carnegie's comment on the cable dispatch. I located Mr. Carnegie at a meeting of the Civic Federation at Hotel Astor. When the guests were taking their departure, I rushed over to the speakers' table to have a word with him. Just as I spoke to Mr. Carnegie, I was surprised to see him duck suddenly on all fours under the table without acknowledging my greeting. I pursued my quarry to his place of refuge. As I crawled under the table, I saw the ironmaster on hands and knees and a worried look on his bearded countenance.

Before I could delve further into the mystery Mr. Carnegie's face was beaming. Getting back on his feet, he displayed a quarter and a dime. Happy as a boy who had found a Christmas morning present, he explained:

"I had taken my ten cents from my vest pocket to give to the hat check girl at the door. When you spoke to me I dropped the coin. Now I have recovered my original coin and an additional twenty-five cents. I tell you, my boy, it's better to be born lucky than rich."

Unfair Discrimination.

Elizabeth was spending Christmas at Uncle Fred's. The kitchen was a busy place, and she was told to stay out of it, which was rather a hardship.

Her cousins, the twins, sometimes made trips out there and she said dolefully to her mother: "The twins keep going to the kitchen and they are just boys and here I'm a nice little girl and I can't go."

A North American Association

—the model, all over the World

IT IS NOT a mere boast to say that the publications of the United States and Canada are the most progressive and farthest advanced of any country in the world.

Eight years ago—in co-operation with advertisers and advertising agents—the leading publishers assisted in organizing the association which places the buying of advertising space on a Basis of Certainty.

The Audit Bureau of Circulations has pioneered the way from old-fashioned, haphazard methods to the modern method of buying space with the publisher's books open to the advertiser. Through this work a remarkably efficient system for auditing publications has been built up and today is applied to practically all the leading newspapers, magazines, farm papers, and trade papers of the United States and Canada.

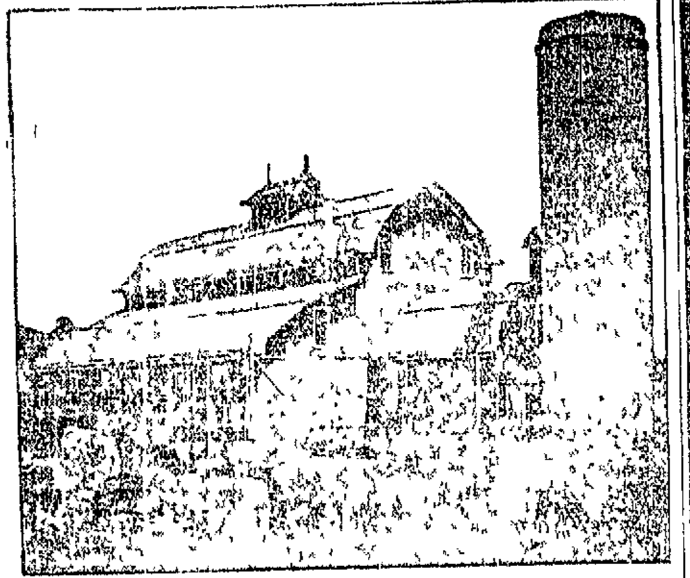

That this system is economically sound and fills a real need in business, is shown by the fact that other countries have patterned their associations after the A. B. C.

England, France and Holland have taken steps to build up Auditing Bureaus that will give the advertiser and the publisher the same opportunity to meet on common business ground that they have in America.

Publishers of this continent willingly co-operate with the A. B. C. because they believe that in furnishing audited circulation figures to the advertisers they are co-operating in a way that will be mutually helpful.

The Courier is a member of the A. B. C. and would be pleased to submit a copy of the latest circulation report.

FEEDING PLANT FOR BEEF CATTLE

Specially Designed for the Food Animal Producer.

SILO AND HAY STORAGE ROOM

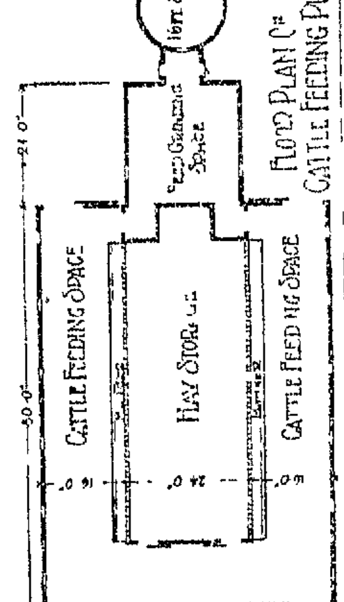

To Get Most Profit Out of Business of Fattening Cattle for Market a Special Type of Feeding Plant Is Essential.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building work for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

With corn comparatively cheap and the price of well-finished beef cattle relatively high, farmers are again turning their attention to fattening ... Western ranges and ... fattening them for market. This was a very profitable business before the price of corn and hay rose to the heights attained previous to two years ago and since the slump in the prices of grains it is again profitable. Marketing corn and hay on the hoof means a great deal better price for these farm crops.

Undoubtedly the greatest profit in this ... is secured from purebred cattle. Purebreds gain weight rapidly and put on more flesh and fat from the same amount of feed. Also they are ready to market a year earlier than scrubs and ... of Herefords, Aberdeen Angus and Shorthorn cattle will be found ... in great quantity of farms in the corn belt and the succulent grass sections.

To get the most profit out of this business cattle feeders erect an unusual type of barn and feeding plant, one of which is shown in the accompanying illustration. ... from the ordinary barn in that ... few if any stalls, the space on the first floor being open and equipped only with feed racks for the roughage and grain. Overhead is large space for the storage of roughage, while adjoining is a silo of capacity sufficient to hold the feed succulent feed ... required for the number of animals being fed.

The barn illustrated is ... 5... feet wide and 80 feet long. Connecting the silo with the barn proper is a feed grinding room 10 by 24 feet. This room is connected with the opening in the silo. Thus the feed is thrown from the silo directly into the feed room where the rations are prepared and ... racks that extend nearly the ... of the space for the cattle ... corner of the barn is a ... door so that the cattle may be allowed to run in pasture or lot and have access to the feeding barn.

Profit from such a building as this comes from three sources. First, it provides a comfortable place for the cattle to take refuge in the wintertime. It requires heat to combat the cold and the heat is supplied by feed. Feed that goes to keep the animals warm rather than to put on flesh is wasted. A safe weatherproof storage space for feed is an economy. An airtight silo is necessary if the green feed is to be preserved in a condition fit for feeding. Hay and other roughage deteriorates unless housed. With a feeding plant such as the one illustrated many animals can be cared for easily as the work of feeding is all under one roof or practically so.

Cattle feeding plants cost less than dairy barns for the reason that the equipment necessary for efficiently handling milk animals is not needed for ... animals. What is really required is protection from weather and storage space for the feed.

Cattle feeders will find that such a building as this will pay for itself in short time. And any farmer who grows corn and hay will find that he can get ... crops by feeding it than by sending it to the elevator. Those in touch with the cattle market are convinced that there is a profitable time ahead for those who have the knowledge and ability to take young steers, fatten them in a comparatively short time and send them to market in first class condition.

FACTS ABOUT PANAMA CANAL

Erroneous Idea Prevails That Ditch Runs From East to West Across Isthmus.

Many people have an idea that the Panama canal runs from east to west straight across the isthmus. The axis of the isthmus runs from southwest to northeast. The canal was built from northwest to southeast, almost at right angles to the strip of land, and the Pacific end of it is about twenty-seven miles east of the Atlantic end.

Both entrances to the canal are protected by breakwaters. A thorough system of lights and buoys makes the canal as safe to use at night as by day.

The passage between the Atlantic ocean and Gatun lake is made by three steps of Gatun locks. On the Pacific side the passage between the summit level (Gatun lake level) and the Pacific is made by means of Pedro Miguel lock, Miraflores lake and Miraflores locks. A set of three locks to make the whole step at one time would have been built on the Pacific side if it had been possible to secure a site affording a firm rock foundation large enough to accommodate them.

The flights are duplicated (or double-barreled) so that ships may be passed in opposite directions simultaneously.

The canal is capable of handling the largest ships now in existence.—Adventure Magazine.

Knowledge Concerning Sun

It is held by some scientists that by reason of the facts known about radio-activity it is possible to increase the estimated age of the sun and the period during which it will continue to furnish light and heat to the earth from ten to twenty times. Thus instead of being 100,000,000 years old the sun may be 1,000,000,000 or 2,000,000,000 years old and its future duration may be 100,000,000 or 200,000,000 years in place of 10,000,000. Knowing as we do that an atom of matter can contain an enormous store of energy in itself we have no right to assume that the sun is incapable of liberating atomic energy to a degree at least comparable with what it would liberate if made of radium.—Wilmington Star.

Old Violin Maker

What is the value of Maggini violins? How can you tell the age of one? Is the maker living? Are they still making these violins?

W. T. P.

Maggini violins are rare and much esteemed. The services of an expert are required to determine the genuineness, age and value of an old violin. Giovanni Paolo Maggini of Brescia was a pupil of Gasparo da Salo and lived from 1580 to 1640. His son Pietro Santo Maggini (1630 to 1680) was also a violin maker. The ... Maggini violins are, of course, no ... genuine.
